"MANUSCRIPT FOUND."

A Verbatim Copy from the Original.

HEREWITH we present to the reader the notorious "Manuscript Story" ["Manuscript Found"], of the late Rev. Solomon Spalding. What gives this document prominence is the fact that, for the past fifty years it has been made to do duty by the opposers of the Book of Mormon and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as the source, the root, and the inspiration, by and from which Joseph Smith and Sydney Rigdon wrote said Book of Mormon and organized said Church. It has been popularly and persistently claimed that the plan, subject matter, including prominent names and localities, history of the origin of the aboriginal races of America, with their arts and sciences, civilizations and customs, were identical in this "Manuscript Found" and in the Book of Mormon. Thousands have believed this false and foolish statement, without giving its truth or falsity an hour's fair and unprejudiced investigation, and then fought the book and the church with a readiness and a zeal almost without a parallel. And now that this veritable "Manuscript Found," with an unbroken chain of evidence proving its identity and running back to E. D. Howe, D. P. Hurlbut, Spalding's "old trunk," and so back to Pittsburgh, Conneaut, and to the very pen of Solomor Spalding, has by the providence of God been furnished us and that, too, by those not of the Church, we take pleasure in exhibiting in the sunlight of solid facts, this hob-goblir of the pulpit, this "nigger-in-the-woodpile" of the press and the forum, that with which they have fooled and frightened the masses and blinded those inquiring into the origin and character of the Book of Mormon.

This seeming huge hindrance and insurmountable ob stacle which is always thrown in the way of the investi gator with all the skill and power that craft and cunning and malice and fear and blind zeal can invent and command, vanishes from the presence of this original witness in the case; for when it speaks it reveals the flimsiness and falsity of the claim that it was in any way or in any sense the origin of the Book of Mormon, or that there is the leas likeness between the two. This newly found "missing link' completes the chain of evidence which proves that the "Manuscript Found" never was and never could be made the occasion, cause, or germ of the Book of Mormon.

Mr. Spalding has been exalted by the opposers of the Latter Day Saints to the very pinnacle of fame, as a very learned, very moral, and very pious man. It is fortunate that his true measure and worth in respect to his learning his morals, and his piety, is now furnished us in this "Manu script Story." God judges men by their works, and it is wise for men to judge of each other after this manner. And when we estimate Mr. Spalding by the character of his work as exhibited in this document, we must grade him down to a very low level, whether in respect to scholarship mental power, moral purity, or pious attainments and tend encies.

The following Correspondence explains the manner in which the Manuscript was preserved and placed n the hands of the present publishers.

This from the Bibliotheca Sacra was republished in many leading journals east and west, among them the Herald of Grinnell, Iowa; the Western Watchman, Eureka, California; the New York Observer, and Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

"The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the tralitional manuscript of Solomon Spaulding, will probably have to be relinquished. That manuscript is doubtless now in the possession of Mr. L. L. Rice, of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, formerly an anti-Slavery Editor in Ohio, and for many years State Printer, at Columous. During a recent visit to Honolulu, I suggested to Mr. Rice that he might have valuable anti-slavery documents in his possession, which he would be willing to contribute to the rich collection already n the Oberlin College Library. In pursuance of this suggestion, Mr. Rice began looking over his old pamphlets and papers, and at length came upon an old, worn, and faded manuscript of about one hundred and seventy-five pages, small quarto, purporting to be a hisory of the migrations and conflicts of the ancient Indian Tribes, which occupied the territory now belonging to the States of New York, Ohio, and Kentucky. On the last page of this manuscript is a certificate and signature, giving the names of several persons known to the signer, who have assured him that to their personal knowledge the manuscript was the writing of Solomon Spaulding. Mr. Rice has no recollection how or when this manuscript came into his possession. It was enveloped in a coarse piece of wrapping paper, and endorsed in Mr. Rice's hand-writing, "A Manuscript Story."

"There seems no reason to doubt that this is the long-lost story. Mr. Rice, myself, and others, compared it with the Book of Mormon, and could detect no resemblance between the two, in general or in detail. There seems to be no name or incident common to the two. The solemn style of the Book of Mormon, in imitation of the English Scriptures, does not appear in the manuscript. The only resemblance is in the fact that both profess to set forth the history of los tribes. Some other explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon must be found, if any explanation is required." Signed, Jame H. Fairchild.

The letter below was written in answer to our sug gestion that the Manuscript be sent for safe keeping to some Historical Society in Chicago, Illinois.

> Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, March 28th, 1885.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH:

The Spaulding Manuscript in my possession came int my hands in this wise. In 1839-40 my partner and myself bough of E. D. Howe the Painesville Telegraph, published at Painesville Ohio. The transfer of the printing department, types, press, &c was accompanied with a large collection of books, manuscripts, &c this manuscript of Spaulding among the rest. So, you see, it ha been in my possession over forty years. But I never examined it, o knew the character of it, until some six or eight months since. The wrapper was marked, "Manuscript Story—Conneaut Creek." The wonder is, that in some of my movements, I did not destroy or bur it with a large amount of rubbish that had accumulated from tim to time.

It happened that Pres't Fairchild was here on a visit, at the tim I discovered the contents of it, and it was examined by him an others with much curiosity. Since Pres't Fairchild published th fact of its existence in my possession, I have had applications for from half a dozen sources, each applicant seeming to think that h or she was entitled to it. Mr. Howe says when he was getting up book to expose Mormonism as a fraud at an early day, when th Mormons had their head-quarters at Kirtland, he obtained it fror some source, and it was inadvertently transferred with the other effects of his printing office. A. B. Deming, of Painesville, who is also getting up some kind of a book I believe on Mormonism, want me to send it to him. Mrs. Dickinson, of Boston, claiming to be relative of Spaulding, and who is getting up a book to show that h was the real author of the Book of Mormon, wants it. She thinks, at least, it should be sent to Spaulding's daughter, a Mrs. Somebody—but she does not inform me where she lives. Deming says that Howe borrowed it when he was getting up his book, and did not return it, as he should have done, &c.

This Manuscript does not purport to be "a story of the Indians formerly occupying this continent;" but is a history of the wars between the Indians of Ohio and Kentucky, and their progress in civilization, &c. It is certain that this Manuscript is not the origin of the Mormon Bible, whatever some other manuscript may have been. The only similarity between them, is, in the manner in which each purports to have been found—one in a cave on Conneaut Creek the other in a hill in Ontario county, New York. There is no identity of names, of persons, or places; and there is no similarity of style between them. As I told Mr. Deming, I should as soon think the Book of Revelations was written by the author of Don Quixotte, has that the writer of this Manuscript was the author of the Book of Mormon. Deming says Spaulding made three copies of "Manuascript Found," one of which Sidney Rigdon stole from a printing office in Pittsburg. You can probably tell better than I can, what ground there is for such an allegation.

As to this Manuscript, I can not see that it can be of any use to rany body, except the Mormons, to show that IT is not the original of the Mormon Bible. But that would not settle the claim that some other manuscript of Spaulding was the original of it. I propose to chold it in my own hands for a while, to see if it can not be put to some good use. Deming and Howe inform me that its existence is exciting great interest in that region. I am under a tacit, but not a positive pledge to President Fairchild, to deposit it eventually in the Library of Oberlin College. I shall be free from that pledge, when I see an opportunity to put it to a better use.

Yours, &c.,

P. S.—Upon reflection, since writing the foregoing, I am of the opinion that no one who reads this Manuscript will give credit to the story that Solomon Spaulding was in any wise the author of the Book of Mormon. It is unlikely that any one who wrote so elaborate a work as the Mormon Bible, would spend his time in getting up so shallow a story as this, which at best is but a feeble imitation of the other. Finally I am more than half convinced that this is his only writing of the sort, and that any pretence that Spaulding was it any sense the author of the other, is a sheer fabrication. It was eas for any body who may have seen this, or heard anything of its contents, to get up the story that they were identical.

Honolulu, Sandwich Islands,

May 14th, 1885.

MR. JOSEPH SMITH; Dear Sir:-

I am greatly obliged to you for the information concerning Mormonism, in your letters of April 30th and May 2d. As I ar in no sense a Mormonite, of course it is a matter of curiosity, mainly, that I am interested in the history of Mormonism.

Two things are true concerning this manuscript in my posses sion: First, it is a genuine writing of Solomon Spaulding; and second, it is not the original of the Book of Mormon.

My opinion is, from all I have seen and learned, that this is the only writing of Spaulding, and there is no foundation for the statement of Deming and others, that Spaulding made another story more elaborate, of which several copies were written, one of which Rigdon stole from a printing office in Pittsburgh, &c. Of course can not be as certain of this, as of the other two points. One theor is, that Rigdon, or some one else, saw this manuscript, or heard it read, and from the hints it conveyed, got up the other and more elaborate writing on which the Book of Mormon was founded. Take that for what it is worth. It don't seem to me very likely.

You may be at rest as to my putting the manuscript into th possession of any one who will mutilate it, or use it for a bad put pose. I shall have it deposited in the Library of Oberlin College in Ohio, to be at the disposal for reading of any one who may wis to peruse it; but not to be removed from that depository. Ma friend, President Fairchild, may be relied on as security for the safe keeping of it. It will be sent there in July, by a friend who is goin there to "take to himself a wife." Meantime, I have made a literate copy of the entire document—errors of orthography, gramma rasures, and all—which I shall keep in my possession, so that any attempt to mutilate it will be of easy detection and exposure. Obertin is a central place, in the vicinity of Conneaut, where the manuscript was written.

I have had an idea, sometimes, that it is due to the Mormons to nave a copy of it, if they took interest in it enought to publish it. As it is only of interest as showing that it is not the original of the Book of Mormon, no one else is likely to wish it for publication.

Miss Dickinson, whom you call a granddaughter of Solomon Spaulding, represents herself to me as his grandniece: "My great ancle, Rev. Solomon Spaulding," she writes.

Rev. Dr. Hyde, President of the Institution, in this place, for raining Native Missionaries for Micranesia, (a very prominent and successful institution), has written an elaborate account of this manuscript, and of Mormonism, and sent it for publication in the Congregationalist, of Boston. I presume it will be published, and you will be interested in reading it.

Very respectfully, yours,

In a postscript Mr. Rice says he found the following endorsement on the Manuscript:

"The writings of Solomon Spaulding proved by Aron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others, The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession.

(Signed)

COPY OF MR. RICE'S LETTER.

Honolulu, H. I., June 12, 1885.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD:-

Herewith I send to you the Solomon Spalding Manuscript, to be deposited in the Library of Oberlin College, for reference by any one who may be desirous of seeing or examining it. As a great deal of inquiry has been made about it since it became known that it was in my possession, I deem it proper that it be deposited for safe keeping, where any one interested in it, whether Mormon or Anti-Mormon, may examine it. It has been in my possession fortysix years-from 1839 to 1885-and for forty-four years of that time no one examined it, and I was not aware of the character of its contents. I send it to you enclosed in the same paper wrapper, and tied with the same string that must have enclosed it for near half a century—certainly during the forty-six years since it came into my possession. I have made and retain in my possession a correct literal copy of it, errors of orthography, of grammar, erasures and all. may allow the Mormons of Utah to print it from this copy which they are anxious to do; and a delegation is now in the Islands awaiting my decision on this point. They claim that they are entitled to whatever benefit they may derive from its publication; and it seems to me there is some justice in that claim. Whether it wil relieve them in any measure, from the imputation that Solomor Spalding was the author of the Book of Mormon, I do not attemp It devolves upon their opponents to show that there are or were other writings of Spalding-since it is evident that this writ ing is not the original of the Mormon Bible.

Truly, yours, &c.,

P. S.—The words "Solomon Spaulding's Writings" in ink or the wrapper were written by me, after I became aware of the con tents. The words "Manuscript Story—Conneaut Creek," in fain penciling, were as now when it came into my possession.

> OBERLIN COLLEGE, OBERLIN, O., July 23, 1885.

I have this day delivered to Mr. E. L. Kelley a copy of the Man uscript of Solomon Spaulding, sent from Honolulu by Mr. L. I. Rice, to the Library of Oberlin College, for safe keeping, and now in my care. The copy was prepared at Mr. Kelley's request, under me supervision, and is, as I believe, an exact transcript of the original manuscript, including erasures, misspellings, &c.

JAS. H. FAIRCHILD,

Prest. of Oberlin College.

KIRTLAND, O., 24th July, 1885.

PRES. W. W. BLAIR, Lamoni, Iowa:

Herewith I transmit to you the copy of the Spaulding Manuscript prepared by Pres. Fairchild as attested by him, together with his certificate, and photograph sheets.

Words and sentences underlined were stricken out in the Manuscript.

Places marked thus ---- the copy was illegible.

INTRODUCTION.

NEAR the west Bank of the Coneaught River there are he remains of an ancient fort. As I was walking and formng various conjectures respecting the character situation & numbers of those people who far exceeded the preesent Inlians in works of art and inginuety, I hapned to tread on a lat stone. This was at a small distance from the fort, & t lay on the top of a great small mound of Earth exactly porizontal. The face of it had a singular appearance. I liscovered a number of characters, which appeared to me to be letters, but so much effaced by the ravages of time, that could not read the inscription. With the assistance of a eaver I raised the stone. But you may easily conjecture ny astonishment when I discovered that its ends and sides ested on stones & that it was designed as a cover to an artiicial Cave. I found by examining that its sides were lined with stones built in a connical form with - - - - down, & hat it was about eight feet deep. Determined to investigate the design of this extraordinary work of antiquity, I prepared myself with the necessar requisites for that purpose and decended to the Bottom of the Cave. Observing one side to be perpendicular nearly three feet from the bot tom, I began to inspect that part with accuracy. noticed a big flat stone fixed in the form of a doar. mediately tore it down and Lo, a cavity within the wal presented itself it being about three feet in diamiter from side to side and about two feet high. Within this cavity! found an earthen Box with a cover which shut it perfectly tite. The Box was two feet in length one & half in breadth & one & three inches in diameter. My mind filled with awful sensations which crowded fast upon me would hardly permit my hands to remove this venerable deposit, but curi osity soon gained the assendency & the box was taken & raised to open it. When I had removed the Cover I found that it contained twenty-eight rolls of parchment - & - tha when - - - appeared to be manuscrips written in eligan hand with Roman Letters & in the Latin Language.

They were written on a variety of Subjects. But the Roll which principally attracted my attention contained history of the author's life & that part of America which extends along the great Lakes & the waters of the Mississippy.

Extracts of the most interesting and important mat ters contined in this Roll I take the liberty to publish.

Gentle Reader, tread lightly on the ashes of the vener able dead. Thou must know that this Country was onc inhabited by great and powerful nations considerably civilized & skilled in the arts of war, & that on ground wher thou now treadest many a bloody Battle hath been fough & heroes by thousands have been made to bite the dust.

In the history given of these nations by my author you will find nothing but what will correspond with the natural entiments we should form on viewing the innumerable renains of antiquity which are scattered over an extensive Country. This is an evidence of the author's impartiality and veracity. But if any should pretend that the whole tory is fictitious or fabulous

To publish a translation of every particular circumtance mentioned by our author would produce a volume oo expensive for the general class of readers, But should his attempt to throw off the veil which has seculded our riew from the tranactions o nations who for ages have been extinct, meet the approbation of the public, I shall then be nappy to gratify the more inquisitive and learned part of my readers by a more minut publication. Apprehensive hat skeptical illiberal or superstitous minds may censure his performance with great accrimony I have only to remark that they will be deprived of a great fund of enterainment - - - of a contrary disposition will obtain. My compassion will be excited more than my resentment and here the contest will end.

Now, Gentle Reader, the Translator who wishes well to thy present and thy future existence entreats thee to peruse his volume with a clear head a pure heart and a candid nind. If thou shalt then find that thy head and thy heart are both improved it will afford him more satisfaction than he approbation of ten thousand who have received no benefit.

And now permit me to admonish thee that if thou houldst reside in or travil thro' any part of the Country

CHAPT. I.

AN EPITOME OF THE AUTHOR'S LIFE & OF HIS ARIVAL IN AMERICA.

As it is possible that in some future age this part of the Earth will be inhabited by Europians & a history of it present inhabitants would be a valuable acquisition I proceed to write one & deposit it in a box secured - - - - s that the ravages of time will have no effect upon it that yo may know the author I will give a succint account of hi life and of the cause of his arival which I have extracte from a manuscript which will be deposited with this history

My name was is Fabius The family name I sustain in Fabius, being decended from the illustrious general of that name. I was born at Rome & received my education under the tuition of a very Learned Master. At the time that Constantine arived at that city and had overcome his entire & and was firmly seated on the throne of the Roma empire I was introduced to him as a young Gentleman of genius and learning & as being worthy of the favourable notice of his imperial majesty. He gave me the appointment of one of his secritaries, & such were the gracious intimations which he frequently gave me of his high approbation of my conduct that I was happy in my station.

They knew not the direcion for to the rising Sun or polar Star, for the heavens vere covered with clouds; & darkness had spread her sable nantle over the face of the raging deep. Their minds vere filled with consternation and despair. & unanimously greed that What could we do? How be extrecated from he insatiable jaws of a watry tomb. Then it was that we elt our absolute dependence on that Almighty & gracious Being who holds the winds & floods in - - - hands. From im alone could we expect deliverance. To him our most ervent desires assended. Prostrate & on bended nees we boured forth incessant Supplication & even Old Ocean appeared to sympathize in our distress by returning the echo of our vociforos Cries & lamentations. After being driven ive days with incridable velocity before the furious wind he storm abated in its violance. but still the strong wind blew strong in the strong as I now believe in the same lirection. Doubtful whether the wind had not changed her point we gave the ship full sail & let her drive. he sixth day after, the storm wholly subsided, the sun rose lear and the heavens once more appeared to smile. Inexpressible was the consternation of all the crew. they found hemselves in the midst of a vast Ocean. No prospect of eturning. All was lost. The wind blowing westwardly, the presumption was that it had been blowing in that lirection during the whole of the storm. No pen can paint he dolorious cries & lamentations of the poor mariners, or the loss of friends for the loss of everything they held Attend O friends & listen to my words A voice from on high hath penetrated my soul & the ir spiration of the Almighty hath bid me proclaim. Let you sails be wide spread & the gentle winds will soon waft yo into a safe harbor. a Country where you will find hosp. tality. Quick as the lightnings flash joy sparkled in ever countenance. A Hymn of Thanksgiving spontaniousl burst forth from their lips. In full confidence that the divine prediction would be accomplished they extoled the loving kindness and tender mercies of their God & pron ised by the assistance of his grace to make ample return (Gratitude. On the fifth day after this we came in sight of sand, we entered a spacious river & continued sailing up th - - - - many leagues until we came in view of a town Every heart now palpitated with joy, & loud shouts gladness expressed the enthusiastic transports of our soul We anchored within a small distance from shore. In mediately the natives ran with apparent signs of surprize astonishment to the bank of the River. After viewing t for some time, & receiving signs of Friendship, they a peared to hold a counsel for a few minutes. Their Kin then stept forward to the edge of the bank, & proffered i the hand of friendship, & by significant gestures invited to Land, promising us protection and hospitality We no found ourselves once more on terra firma, & were conduc ed by the king & four chiefs into the town whilst the mu titude followed after, shouting & performing many od iesticulations. The King ordered an entertainment to prepared for his new friends which consisted of - - - - fit boiled beans & samp - - - The whole was placed und a wide-spreading Oak in wooden dishes A large clam she a Stone Knife were provided for each one. The king hen came forward with about twenty of his principal subcts, & con seated us (being about twenty in number) & eated us by the side of our repast. He & his company hen took seats in front. After waving his hand & bowng all fell to eating & a more delicious repast we never enbyed. The repast being finished, our attention was called a collection of about one thousand men & women who ad formed a ring & invited our company to come forward to the midst. After gazing upon us sometime with surrize we were permitted to withdraw & to take our stand the Ring. About forty in number then walked into the nidle of the Ring & began a song with but a discordant nd hedious modification of sounds, & such frantic jesticuations of body that it seemed that chaos had bro't her aries to set the world in an uproar. And an uproar it was n a short time for the whole company fell to dancing, houting, whooping, & screaming at intervals, then dancig jumping & tumbling with many indescribable distorons in their countanance & indelicate jestures. In fact, ney appeared more like a company of devils than human Beings. This lasted about one hour. They then took neir places in a circle & at a signal given gave three most remendous whoops, they then instantly dispersed playing nany antike capers & making such a confused medly of ound by skreaming, whooping, screaching like owls, Barkng like dogs and wolves & bellowing croaking like Bullrogs, that my brain seemed to be turned topseturvy, & for ome time I could scarce believe that they belonged to the human species.

CHAPT. II.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE SETTLEMENT OF THE SHIP'S

COMPANY & MANY PARTICULARS RESPECT-

ING THE NATIVES.

As no alternative now remained but either to make the desperate attempt to return across the wide boistrous Ocea or to take up our residence in a country in a land of savage inhabited by savages & wild ferocious beasts, we did nong hesitate. We held a solemn treaty with the King all the chiefs of his nation. They agreed to cede to us tract of excellent land on the north part of the town of which was six wigwams & engaged perpetual amity hospitality & the protection of our lives & property. I consideration of this grant we gave them fifty yards of scalet cloth & fifty knives With this present they were high pleased.

Arrangements must now be made for - - - settl ment. Vessel & cargo had received no material damage by striping the vessel of its plank we could erect a house which we could deposite the whole cargo in safety. A hands were immediately employed, some in procuring tin ber which we hued on two sides & then locked togethe some in procuring shingles & some in striping the vessel its plank; & having a large quantity of nails on board, ten days we finished a very convenient store-house, sufficiently spacious to receive the whole cargo. We also but a small house adjoining which was to be the habitation

e Captain & myself. Having secured all our property, e then found it necessary to establish some regulations for e government of our little society. The Captain whose me was Lucian & myself were appointed judges in all atters of controversy & managers of the public property make bargains with the natives & barter such articles as e did not need for necessaries. As we all professed The ext thing to be done was to to believe in the religion of sus Christ we unanimously chose Trojanus, the mate of e ship, a pious good man to be our minister, to lead ourvotions every morning & evening & on the Lords day. But now a most singular & delicate subject presented elf for consideration. Seven young women we had on pard as passeniers to viset certain friends in Brittain. hree of them were ladies of rank & the rest were healthy icksom lassies. Whilst deliberating on this subject a ariner arose whom we called Droll Tom Hark ye, shipates says he. Whilst tossed on the foaming billows what ave son of Neptune had any more regard for woman than Sturgeon, but now we are all safely anchored on Terra ma, our sails furled & ship keeled up, I have a huge longg for some of those rosy dames. But willing to take my ance with my shipmates, I propose that they should make eir choice of husbands. The plan was instantly adopted. s the choice fell on the young women they had a consultion on the subject, & in a short time made known the sult. Droll Tom was rewarded for his benevolent prosal with one of the most sprightly, rosy dames in the mpany. Three other of the most cheerful, resolute marers were chosen by the other three bucksom Lassies. he three young Ladies of rank fixed their choice on the aptain the Mate & myself. Happy indeed in my partner, I had formed an high esteem of the excellent qualities of her mind. The young Lady who chose me for a partner was possessed of every attractive charm both of body & mind. We united heart & hand with the fairest prospec of enjoying every delight & gratification which are attend ant on the connubial state. Thus ended the affair. You may well conceive our singular situation. The six poofellows who were doomed to live in a state celibacy or accept of savage dames, discovered a little chagrin & anxiety. However, they consoled themselves with the idea of living in families, where they would enjoy the company of the fair sex, and be relieved from the work which belongs the department of women.

Our community might be said to be one family, the we lived in seperate houses situate near each other. The property was common stock. What was produced by our labor was likewise to be common. All subject to the distribution of the judges, who were to attend to each famil & to see that propper industry & econimy were practise.

The Captain & myself, attended with our fair partner & two mariners, repaired to the new habitation, which cor sisted of two convenient apartments. After having partook of an elligant dinner & drank a bottle of exceller wine our Spirits were exhilerated & the deep gloom which beclouded our minds evaporated. The Captain assumin his wonted cheerfulness, made the following address. "M "sweet, good soul'd fellows, we have now commenced "new voyage. Not such as bro't us over mountain billow to this butt end of the world. No, no, our voige is on di "land, & now we must take care that we have sufficies ballast for the riging. Every hand on board this sh clasp hands & condesend to each others humour. This will promote good cheer & smooth the raging billows of life. Surrounded by innumerable hordes of human beings, who resemble in manners the Orang outang, let us keep aloof from from them & not embark in the same matrimonial ship with them. At the same time, we will treat them with good cheer & inlighten their dark souls with good instruction. By continuing a different people & prefering our customs, manners, religion & arts & sciences & other things another Italy will grow up in this wilderness, & we shall be celebrated as the fathers of a great & happy nation."

May God bless your soul, says one of the mariners, what would you have us do who have had the woful luck not to get mates, to cheer our poor souls and warm our odies. Methinks I could pick out a healthy plum Lass rom the copper colored tribe that by washing & scrubing ner fore & aft & upon the labbord & stabbord sides she vould become a wholesome bedfellow. I think, may it please your honour, that I could gradually pump my notions nto her head & make her a good shipmate for the cupboard and as good hearted a Christian as any of your white lamsels & upon my Soul I warrant you if we have chil-Iren, by feeding them with good fare, & keeping them lean, they will be as plump & as fair & nearly as white as your honours children. Upon this I filled the bottle with wine & observing to honest Crito that he was at liberty to nake the experiment if he could find a fair - - - to his iking. I then expressed the sweet pleasure I received from the addresses of the speakers & wished drank success to the new voige. All drank plentifully, & the exhileration produced the greatest cheerfulness & hilarity. By this time the Sun had hid his head below the horizon & darkness invited all the animal creation to sleep & rest We retired two & two, hand in hand. Ladies heads a little awri, blushing like the morn & --- But I forgo to mention that our society passed a resolution to build a church in the in the midst of our vilage.

MANY PARTICULARS RESPECTING THE NATIVES.

Interest as well as curiosity invited an acquaintance with our new neighbors. They were called in their Language Deliwanucks. They were Tall, bodies weel proportioned, strait limbs, complections of a brownish hue broad cheek bones, black wild roling eyes, & hair black & course. To strangers they were both - - - - true to their engagements, ardent in their friendship, but to enimies im placable, cruel & barbarous in the extreme. Innumerable hordes of this description of people were scattered over an extensive country, who gained their living by hunting the elk, the deer & a great variety of other wild animals by fishing & fowling & by raising corn, beans & squashes Shooting the arrow, flinging stones, wrestling, jumping pping, and runing were their principal amusements, & izes would often be staked as a reward to the conqueror. heir cloathing consisted of skins dressed with the hair on, it in warm weather only the middle part of their bodies ere incumbered with any covering. The one half of the ead of the men was shaved & painted with red & the one alf of the face was painted with black. The head was lorned with feathers of various kinds, & their ears & noses ere adorned ornamented with rings formed formed from e sinues of certain animals, on which were suspended nooth stones of different coulors. Thus cloathed, thus inted, thus ornimented, the Deliwannuck made a most rrif - - - They held festivals at stated times which ried in the manner of conducting them, according to the ject they had in view. At one of their annual festivals eir ceremonies were particularly singular & different from ly that were ever practised by any nation. Here a desiption would give us some idea of their religion, & would atify the curiosity of an injenious mind.

When the time arives, which is in September, the who hole tribe assemble. They are dressed & ornimented in e highest fashion. The women in particular have their trments & heads so adorned with feathers, shells, & wamim, that they make a very brilliant & grotesque appearance. The form a circle: their countanances are solemn. Speaker mounts a stage in the midst. At this moment to Black Dogs led by two Boys & two white Dogs led two young damsels enter the circle & are tied together. The Speaker then extended his hands & spoke. Hail, ye worite children of the great and good Spirit, who resides the Sun who is the father of all living creatures & those arms encircle us all around, who defends us from the malicious design of that great malignant Spirit that pour upon us all the evils we endure He gives us all our mea & our life & causes the corn & the fruits to spring up & makes us to rejoice in his goodness. He hath prepared delightful Country to receive us, if we are valiant in battl or are benevolent & good. There we can pick all kinds o delicious fruit, & have game & fish in abundance & ou women being improved in beauty & sprightliness will caus our hearts to dance with delight. But wo unto you wick ed, malicious mischievous mortals. Your lot will be cas in a dark dreary, mirey swamp, where the malignant Spiri will torment you with musquetoes & serpents & will giv you nothing to eat but toads, frogs & snails. But my dea friends, all hail, here is a custom which is sanctioned b time immemorial. Look steadfastly on the black dogs let not your eyes be turned away, when they are thrown o the sacred pile & the flames are furiously consuming the bodies, then let your earnest prayer assend for pardon your transgressions will flee away like shadows & your sire will be carried by the smoke into the shades of oblivion When this solemn expiatory sacrifice is ended then prepare your souls to partake of the holy festival Each one will re ceive a precious morsel from these immaculate snow co ored dogs, in token that your offences have all evaporate in the smoke of the holy sacrifice. & that you are than! ful to him the benevolent Spirit, for the abundance of god things that you enjoy, & that you humbly anticipate th continuance of his blessing that he will defend you again the evil designs of that malignant Spirit, who gives us gav & wormwood, & fills our bosom with pain & our eyes wil tears. He then proclaimed, let the sacred pile be erected & the solemn sacrifice performed. Instantly about or ndred men come forward with small dry wood & bundles dry sticks & having thrown them in one pile within the cle, they set the pile on fire. The black dogs were ocked on the middle head, & thrown on the top, in a bment all was in a blaze & the flames assended in curls to aven. The whole company assumed the most devout itude & muttered in sounds almost inarticulate their hum- confession & earnest requests.

When the dogs were consumed & the fire nearly exguished, the ceremonies of their sacred festival began. ne white dogs which were very plump & fat were locked on the head & their throats cut. Their hair was en singed off, having first their entrails taken out, & beg suspended by the nose before a hot fire, they were soon asted, thrown upon a long table & desected into as many ces as there were persons to swallow them. The comny immediately formed a procession, one rank of men e other of women, the men marching to the left & the omen to the right of the table, each one took a piece & voured it with as good a - - - - if it had been the most licious morsel. Having completed these sacred cereonies with great solemnity, the whole company formed emselves into a compact circle round the stage ten musins immediately mounted, & facing the multitude on every le sang a song. The tune & the musical voices of the igers pleased the ear, whilst the imagination was delightwith the poetic inginuity of the composition. The mulude all joined in the chorus with voice so loud & multiious, that the atmosphere quaked with terror, & the bods & neighbouring hills sent back by way of mockery, Int back the sound of their voices, their vociferation imoved by ten-fold confusion. Perhaps, reader, you have the curiosity to hear the song. I can give you only the last stanzy & the chorus.

"For us the sun emits his rais

"The moon shines forth for our delight.

"The stars shine forth extol our heroes prais

"And warriors flee before our sight.

CHORUS.

"Delawan to chakee poloo

"Manegengo forwah toloo

"Chanepant, lawango chapah

"Quinebogan hamboo gowah.

The solemnities are ended & in their opinion their pool souls are compleatly whitewashed & every stain entirel effaced. A little - - - - will now dissipate the solemnity inspire them with cheerfulness & meriment. The who tribe repair to the top of an hill, at one place their is gradual slope a small distance, & then it desends about twenty-five feet in an almost perpendicular direction, at tl bottom of which is a quagmire which is about ten feet length. & the soft mud is about three feet deep. At each end the ground is soft, but not miry. Down this declivi, twenty pair of very suple & sprightly young men & wome are to desend. If by their dexterity & agility they esca the quagmire, a piece of wampum will be the reward each fortunate champion; but if they plunge in their re ompense will be the ridicule of the multitude. In making this desent, six young women & five young men by a su prising dexterity in whirling their bodies as they desende cleared themselves from the quagmire. The rest as the turn came, plunged in & came out most wofully muded the great diversion of the Spectators. The incident while excited the most meriment, hapned when the last pa desended. by an unlucky spring to clear himself from t agmire he bro't his body alongside of the declivity & ed his whole length into the midst of the quagmire, here he lay his whole length in an horizontal position on back neither heels nor head up, but horizontally, soft easy, but alas, when one unlucky event happens another lows close on its heals. the fair-plump corpulent damsel affectionate sweetheart came instantly sliding with great ocity. She saw the woful position of here beloved. She shed him no harm, she raised her feet, this bro't the center gravity directly over the center of his head, here she ted a moment, his head sunk, she sunk after him, his els kicked against the wind like Jeshuran waxed fat, but a word from his lips, but his ideas came in quick sucsion, tho't he, what a disgrace to die here in the mud der the pressure of my sweetheart, however his time for h reflections were short, the tender hearted maid collectall her agility in one effort, dismounted & found herself dry land in an instant, not a moment to be lost. ed her lover by one leg, & draged him from the mud, a ious figure extending about six feet six inches on the bund, all besmeared from head to foot, spitting, puffing, ating & struggling for breath. Poor man, the whole ltitude laughing at thy calamity, shouting ridiculing, ne to give thee consolation but thy loving and sympathetic tner in misfortune.

Upon my soul, exclaims Droll Tom, Stern foremost. at bouncing Lass ought to have the highest prize for dragher ship from the mud. She was cleaning the filth m his face.

A JOURNEY TO THE N. W. & REMOVALL

Gracious God how deplorable our situation Are vi doomed to dwell among hordes of savages & be deprive of all intercourse with friends & the civilized world? what will be the situation of our offspring? Will the preserve our customs & manners, cultivate the arts & so ences & maintain our holy religion; or rather will they n rather degenerate into savages & by mingling with the become the most - - - race of beings in existence. Wi can indure such reflection, such heart-rending anticipatio They pour upon my soul like a flood & bear me dov with the weight of a milstone. O that my head we water, & my eyes a fountain of tears, Then my intoleral burthen should should be poured forth in a torrent & r soul set at liberty. But behold the light springs up beams upon my soul. She brings in her train Hope tl celestial Godes, that sure & strong anchor that dispenser comfort & pleasing anticipation, & that dispeller of corre ing grief & blank dispair. She bids me review the explo ed reasoning of of a great philosopher & compare it w. my own observations, perhaps the result will point ou safe road to the land of our nativity.

Thus I reasoned respecting the solar system of wh the earth is a part. Provided the earth is stationary accoing to the present system of philosophy, then the sun moon & the plannets, being at an immense distance from earth, must perform their revolutions around her with onceivable velocity; Whereas, if according to the plaic system, the earth is a globe & the sun is stationary, n the earth by a moderate velocity - - - perform her revtions. This scheme will represent the solar system as playing the transendant wisdom of its Almighty archit, for in this we behold the Sun suspended by Onmipoce & all the plannets moving round him as their common ter in exact order & harmony. In this we can easily count for days & nights & the diferent seasons of the ir. When the earth presents one part of her face to the 1 it is day, & when that part is turned from his beams it night. When se varies to the South the sun shines upon in a more perpendicular direction, the sun beams become pre dense & the heat increases, as she turns back the heat creases in proportion as this part of the earth looses its rpendicular direction, & to the sun & the cold becomes ore intense in the same proportion. This account for the rious seasons of the year appears correct & consistent & thly honourable to the divine perfection.

But behold the other system. The earth firmly fixed a firm foundation, perhaps a stone, some say on a giants ck who stands on a - - - back. Its surface widely extends arly horizontal, & its cut down & its sides cut down rait or perpendicular to the the very bottom, below which a fathomless abiss. Pray, Mr. Philosopher, what man as ever there & looked down & what prevents the Ocean, less it is damd with earth & rocks, from pouring down & osing itself in this horrible abis? But how exrensive is is teraqueous surface? Indeel I am of opinion if this system is true, I am nearly at one end of it. But th hipothises is too absurd & inconsistent. The earth must b of a spherical form & a westerly course will lead us to th land of our nativity. Perhaps this is a part of the easter continent, or perhaps only a narrow strip of the Ocean it tervenes? On no other principle can we account for the emigration of the ancestors of these innumerable hords thuman beings that possess this continent. Their tradition is that their ancestors came from the west, & they agree if their information that at the distance of fifteen days journed in a westernly direction there are nations vastly more merous, powerful & civilized than themselves.

The earth therefore must be of a spherical form a Glole & a westerly course will lead us to the land of our nativity On what principle can we account for emigration of the al cestors of these innumerable hords of human beings the possess this Continent? Their tradition tells them the they emigrated from the westward. From this I draw the conclusion that the sea if any, which intervenes between the two Continents at the westward is not so extensive b that it may be safely navigated I have also learned fro some of the natives We are also informed by some of the natives that at the distance of about fifteen days journey a north westerly course there is a great river which runs a south westerly direction, they can not tell how far & th along the banks of this river there are great towns, mighty kings & a people who live in a state of civilation From all these considerations I am determined to remove pursue a westerly course, & seek the delightful country ancestors., I immediately communicated my determinon & the reasons on which it was founded to our little ciety, who joyfully acquiessed. It was that to be the st prudential to find out the disposition & character of inhabitants, who were settled along the great River lest should fall into the hands of Robbers. For this pure my man Crito & myself & a Delawan for an interpreset forth. We passed thro' a country interspersed with ages, inhabited by the same kind of people as the Delans, until we came to a great Mountain. Having passed er this, we had not traveled far before we came to the isfluence of two great rivers which in conjunction proced a river which was called Owaho, deep enough for navigation of ships. Here was a lagge to wnor city inpited by a different race of people from any we had seen ore. We were immediately conducted to the King & re received who received us very graciously, & having ed a number of very pertinent questions & received wer to his satisfaction, I then made known to him our iness & had all my requests granted. As we proposed move into his territory, he offered to furnish us for our avenience, with four Mammoons & four men to manage m. These were an animal of prodigious magnitude n biger than the elephant, which the natives had tamed domesticated. They were very sagacious & docile & re employed in carying burthens & in drawing timber n plowing their land. Their hair at the Spring season s about seven inches in length, & was of a fine wooly sistence, & being sheared off at the proper season, was nufactured into course cloath. And the milk of the nale which they produced in abundance afforded a very olesome nutriment. Having thus succeeded beyond our expectations, we made as much expidition to return as po sible. We arrived in safety without any material accident The Little Society I had left were greatly rejoiced at o returne, & highly pleased with the account we gave of t' country we had visited, & at the sight of those extraordina & prodigious animals Mammons which we had bro't to co vey our baggage. No time was lost to make preparatifor the journey. The Captain, Mate & myself went to t King & held a conference with him & the chiefs & obtain leave to depart, tho' with apparent regret & reluctan-Sacks were provided from course cloth to receive the me valuable part of our goods & furniture. These were throu across three of the Mammoons. The other was caparison in a manner too tedious to describe for the accommodati of our women & children. They were all mounted up him & rode with great convenience & safety. Being tl prepared & ready Thus having resided among the Deliw: two years, & being prepared to take our departure. T King & his chiefs & many of his principal Subjects ca forward to take an affectionate farewell. This was de on both sides with with mutual expressions of the m ardent & sincere friendship & the most earnest wishes prayers for future prosperity & happiness. Having tal our final adieu I observed honest Crito sheding tears v plentifully. You seem to be affected, said I. God b your honour said he, when I think how kind & gener these poor Delawans have been to us, I can not help f ing an affection & friendship for them. We were obli to anchor amongst them, we were strangers, & helpless they were ignorant Savages, yet they held out the hand kindness, & treated us as brothers & sisters. Have they fulfilld the law of Christian charity? O that they v od Christians, may God forgive their ignorance & unbef, & reward them for their kindness & genosity. We ssed on. No obsticles impeded our journey until we me to the great river Suscowan, which lies, runs between e Deliwah River & the great moun mountain. The ater being too deep for fording, we built a small boat, & ith this at several times, we conveyed the whole of the ggage & company & baggage across, except the mangers of the Mammoons, who mounted them & forded & vam across. We then proceeded on by slow marches. - - ut in crossing the great mountain we had some difficulties encounter, but however met with received no material image. but finally arived safely at the great city Owhahon the twenty-fifth day after our departure from Delawan.

Fatigued with a long & difficult journey great joy & adness were visible in every in countanance & all were sposed to establish our residence here, until further introduced in the prosecute our journey to Europe. The King & his rincipal officers proffered us every assistance necessary to take our situation agreeable. They assigned us in combiance with our request conformity to our desire a number f houses on the bank of the river a little distance from the ty. We made him some valuable presents in return, which he received as a token of friendship, but not as a ompensation. For such was the high sense of honor which his prince sustained, that when he made a present he would take it as an insult to offer him anything as a compensation.

Having now once more become settled our little comnunity continued the same regulations which they had esablished at Deliwan & all things proceeded in peace & our ffairs prospered.

A DESCRIPTION OF THE OHONS, & MANNER OF PROCURING A LIVING.

I am now to describe a species of nation who have by little resemblance to those to those innumerable tribes savages, who live along the coast of the Atlantic. The complexion, the form & construction of their bodies, the customs manners laws government & religion all demorstrate that they must have originated from some other ne tion & have but a very distant affinity with their savag neighbors. As to their persons they were taller on a average than I had ever seen in any nation, their bone were large limbs strait & shoulders broad. Their eve rather small & sunk deep in the head. Their forehead were prominent & the face below tapering in such a mar. ner that the chin that was formed nearly to a point. Ast their complexion it was bordering on an olive tho' of lighter shade. Their eyes were generally of a dark brow or black. Their hair of the same color, tho' I have some times seen persons, whose hair was of a redish hue.

They clothed themselves in choath which was manufactured among themselves from the hair of the Mammoo & from Cotton, which was transported from the Sout west westward. The men wore shoes & long stocking wide trousers, a waistcoat & a garment with wide shor sleaves, which came down to their nees, & in cold weather a cloak over the whole. The covering for the head wa neraly a kind of a Cap, which ran up high & tapered to oint. This was generally made of fur skins & was ornented with feathers. It had a small brim in the shape an half moon to project over the forehead. The women ides stockings & shoes wore a short petecoat a shirt of ton a loose garment with sleaves which they girted and them with belts & a cloack. They had various ornents such as ribbons made from cotton & coulared with erent coulars, the most beautiful feathers that could be ained & shells of various kinds. Indeed the higher class women were extremely fond of ornament, & wore ced a large share of their happiness in the brilliancy & idy appearance of their garments. These people obned their living generally by the cultivation of the Land, the manage by tending & managing certain animals ich had been so long domesticated that they had lost their d nature & become tame. Corn, wheat, beans, squashes carrots they raised in great abundance. The ground was wed by horses & generally made very mellow for the eption of the seed.

It was the occupation of a certain part of the men to d upon the tame animals, to drive them to pasture, & p them from straying, & feed them when the snow was the ground. Two men would tend twenty Mammouth, ich were indifferent whether they fed on grass or cropt bushes. When these animals were fat their flesh was hly esteemed. They had droves of Elk, which they I so tamed & tutored that they could manage them as y pleased. These had their tenders (several words gible) & would follow them like a flock of sheep. & it is but seldom that any would leave their companions. he elk constituted a considerable portion of their animal food. The horses were managed in the same way & the people tho't their meat to be a savoury dish. They had large numbers of turkies & gees, which tho' originally wild yet by treating them with great familiarity by croping their wings & feeding them they frequently they discovered no disposition to ramble off, but would propagated their species & laid eggs in abundance.

Hunting & fishing were the employment of some others followed the mechanical buciness & others carried on a bartering trade to the Southwestward in order to furnish to furnish the people with cotton & other articles whose production was not congenial to their climate. By pursuing these various employments they generally had an abundance of provision & were at all seasons comfortably cloathed. And here I would remark as one striking characteristic of this people, that they observed great neatnes in their dress, in their cookery & in their houses.

The manufacturing of lead Iron & lead was understood but was not carried on to that extent & perfection as i Europe. A small quantity of Iron in proportion to the number of Inhabitants served to supply them with all the impliments which custom had made necessary for their use By hammering & hardening their Iron they would convert it nearly into the consistence of Steal & fit it for the pur pose of edged tools.

The potery business was conducted with great ingine ity & great quantities of stone & earthen ware consisting of every kind of vessel of every construction which we needed for family use, were manufactured in every part of this extensive country. They would These vessels the they ornimented with pictures with the likenessess of rious kinds of animals & trees & impressed upon them h coulars as would strike the fancy with delight. The nales of the high Class most welthy Class would often re a large & superfluous quantity of this brittle furniture decorate one apartment of the house. The vessels they anged in such order as to make a display of taste & imposs the mind with the agreeable sensation of beauty.

In Architecture there can be no comparison with the ilized nations of Europe. In their most welthy & popus Cities they their houses & public buildings exhibit no gance, no appearance of wealth or grandure, all is plain nothing superfluous. But convenience seems to be the lole object they had in view in the construction of their ldings of every kind.

Their houses were generally but one story high built wood, being framed & covered with split clapboards or ngles, & in the inside the walls were formed of clay, ich was plastered over with a thin coat of lime. Their uses seldom consisted of more than three apartments to their chimneys they built construct a wall of stone but five feet hight for the fire to be against which they ild their fire, from the top of this wall they construct the mney with thin pieces of split timber, on the inside with the dirt or clay of whih they plaister wet dirt or clay which in mpleatly covers & adheres to the timber & prevents the from having any operation upon it. The inside of their uses as the women generally practise neatness, makes a ich better appearance than the outside.

It is my opinion says Trojanus that this people display aste in building which is formed upon the true principles Reason. Their houses are sufficiently spacious for connience. No expense or Labour are thrown away in building useless apartments or in erecting their houses higher than what convenience requires. The whole cat: logue of ornamental trumpery is neglected. This in Rom: produces more than half the Labour & expense in building Yes says Lucian, and without this these labouring peop must starve for want of employment, & the citizens of the Roman empire would be deprived of the honor of posse. sing a splendid Capital & of the exquisite pleasure of b. holding the greatest exhibition of human ingenuity in the eligance the splendour the purity & beauty of their house, their palaces & their public edificies. True indeed, repli-Trojanus, men may be dazed & delighted with such o jects for the moment, But could not wealth be better by stowed upon to promote interest of the community & f charitable purposes & these artists better employ the strength & ingenuity in producing some substantial benefits themselves & others? Rejoins Lucian, the course reasily dictates is to avoid extremes. A slab coulared world wou tire the senses by its uniformity & too much orniment splendor, would cease to please by its frequency.

Besides, lofty houses can be more easily overthrow by tornadoes or tumbled down upon our heads by eart quakes. The course, says Lucian that reason dictates is avoid extremes. A slab coulored world by its uniform would tire the senses, & by its possessing too much orrement & splendor it would cease to please. (But the worlder wont cease when it is considered that mankind who but few exceptions to walk in the tracks of their fathers to pursue the road marked out by their education.)

CHAP. VI.

DESCRIPTION OF THE LEARNING, RELIGION & CUSTOMS OF THE OHONS.

Learning appears to be so important to the nature of 1 & a good convenient share of it so easy to obtain, that ne may wonder why it is not universally diffused thro' world. But If we can place any reliance on the dark als of antient history, it is certain that letters are indebtfor their existence to the inventive genius of certain exrdinary characters. Egypt & Chaldea contended for honour of being the first who invented letters. Perhaps were invented in each nation nearly at the same time. let this be as it may could no other nation in the world duce as great geniuses as Egypt or Chaldea? * Is there natural obsticle to prevent their production in America well as in Asia? Whatever may be the reasoning of e on this subject, the fact is that I found Letters or some e of learning, tho' in a very imperfect state among this ple. At present I shall wave the account of its introtion & shall merely describe the state of learning as it ted among the Ohons. They had characters which esent words & all compound words were had each part esented by its appropriate character. The variation of s, moods & tenses was designated by certain marks ed under the characters. They generally wrote on

te. The most probable conjecture is that they were communicated from ne nation to the other.

parchment beginning at the right wrote from the top the bottom, placing each character directly under the preceding one & having finished one column or line the begin the write the next on the left of that & so continue of until they cover the parchment if the subject requires in the sound of their characters & the application as to be able to read with fluencey & to write with ease & accuracy.

In the principal Cities & towns the government appointed learned men to instruct the sons of the higher class of Citizens & in the course of four or five years they we make such proficiency as to become tolerable schollars.

The works of the learned are not very voluminous Records are kept of the transactions of their Government Their constitution & laws are committed to writing. sacred Roll in manuscript is preserved among the Record of their Emporors & kings. & are dispersed thro' the Expire & much pains taken to diffuse the knowledge of the among the people. In all their large town & Cities the have deposited under the care of a priest a sacred Rowhich contains the tenets of their Theology & a description of their religious ceremonies. This order of men public comments upon these sacred writings. They publish some tracts on moral philosophy & some containing a collection of proverbs & the wise sayings of their sages.

But the kind of composition in which they most exis poetry. In poetic numbers they describe the great ever which take place & the exploits & mighty achievements their heroes. In soft elegies they describe paint the Amon of Lovers & in pathetic strains they delineate the calami

In their assemblies it is very common for a certain ss of these learned poets to entertain the company (- - gone - - -) with a resital of poetic pieces describing batles & exploits of their warriors, or to sing some ourous or witty ballad. As for theators they have none, as a kind of susstitute there are actors who entertain people by pronounsing dialogues or plays in which they play all the arts of mimicry & act out the express in their intanance their gesture & the tone of their voices the ferent passions of the human mind. As only a small tion of the people are instructed in the arts of reading & iting, of consequence the great mass must possess a large re of ignorance, but not so great a share as savages who ve no learning among them. They hear the conversah & the lectures of their sages, they are entertained with leir poetic orators entertain them with the productions of ir poets, containing the history of great events & mighty hievements. Their actors divert & please them by exng the various passions at the same time communicating truction & correcting the natural savageness of manner & as the pieces they rehearse contain many ideas & senhents tending to expose the deformity of vice & the folof superstition & the disgustingness of rude & clownish inners, the people are of consequence improved & considbly refined & add to their living in compact towns or nsiderable cities in which there is a constant & reciprocal nmunication of ideas, which of course would have no all effect to inform their minds. To all these causes mbined the Ohons the great mass of the people are inbted for possessing a considerable share of knowledge & ilization.

RELION VII.

In every nation there is some kind of Religion & il every religion, however adulterated & corrupted, ther and some things which are commendable, some things which serve to improve the morals & influence mankind to conduct better than what they would do provided they pursuel the natural dictates of their depraved mind. without are restraint As this sentiment is an established maxim which has been believed in every nation from the earliest ages every nation, hense it has been the policy of all gover ments to encourage & protect some kind of religion. examining the religious systems, sentiments & precert which are believed & practised throughout this extensia Empire, & which are encouraged & protected by the gold ernment. I found some things which are common to tr various systems of theology in Europe & Asia, & sort things which have no resemblance to either From the sacred Roll as it is denominated I shall extract the tenets: their theology & a description of their religious ceremonis It expresses them them to this effect.

"There is an intelligent omnipotent Being who is see existent & infinitely good & benevolent. Matter eternal existed. He put forth his hand & formed it into subodies as he pleased. He presides over the universe & la a perfect knowledge of all things. From his own spiriting substance he formed seven sons. These are his principal.

its to manage the affairs of his empire. He formed the es of men from matter. Into each body he emitted ined a particle of his own spiritual substance, in conseace of which man in his first formation was inclined to volence & goodness. There is also another great ingent Being who is self-existent & possessed of great er but not of Omnipotence. He is filled with infinite ce against the good Being & exerts all his subtlety & er to ruin his works. Seing the happy situation of man oproached so near as to tuch his soul with his deliterious I. The poison was immediately diffused & contamid his passions & appetites. His reason & understandreceived no injury. The good being looking upon his appy offspring with infinite love & compassion, made a ee that if mankind would reduce their passions & appeunder the government of reason, he should be enjoy ings in this world, & be compleatly happy after death oul quits his body. Death dissolves the connection. erial Bodies are prepared for the souls of the righteous. se bodies can pass thro' any part of the universe & are ible to mortal eyes. Their place of residence is on a t & city vast plain, which is beautified with magnificent ings, with Trees fruits & flowers. Here they enjoy y delight which No imagination can paint the delights elicity of the Righteous. But the wicked have no ial are denied etherial bodies. Their souls naked & able of seeing light dwel in darkness & are tormented the keenest anguish. Ages roll away & the good Beas compassion upon them. He permits them to take ssion of etherial bodies & they arise quick to the abodes elight & glory. Now, O man, attend to thy duty &

defraud not thy neighbours nor suffer thy hands secretly convey his property from him. Preserve thy body from the contamination of lust, & remember that the seduction of thy neighbours wife would be a great Crime. Let the citizens be numbered once in two years, & if the your women who are fit for marriage are more numerous that the young men, then wealthy men who are young & whave but one wife shall have the privilege with the permision of the king to marry another until the number of the single young women & the single young men are material. But he who hath two wives shall have a hoprovided for each & he shall spend his time equally we each one.

Be grateful for all favours & forsake not thy friend adversity. Treat with kindness & reverence thy Parer Forsake them not in old age nor let their cheek be furrow with tears for the want of bread. Bow down thy head fore the aged, treat thy superiors with respect, & place rulers & thy teachers in the most honourable seats. Rulers consult the welfare of the people & not agrand themselves by oppression & base bribes. Let Religion Teachers walk in the road which leads to celestial happing & lead the people after them. Let Parents restrain vices of their children & instruct their minds in use knowledge. Contention & Strife is is the Bane of Failies & the destruction of domestic happiness, being you ther the husband & wife ought to draw in the same ction. Their countanances will then appear beautiful e with the effulgent Beams of Friendship & love, peace armony will attend their habitation & their affairs will per.

Hold out the hand of kindness & friendship to thy hbor, consider him when reduced to indigence & dist. He is as dear to the great & good being as what thou & thou now hast an opportunity to manifest the distion of thy heart To afford him relief will be pleasing by Maker & an expression of thy gratituge.

Envious & malicious Souls are almost incurably contamed with that hellish poison which which was first disred the soul of man. Partake not of their guilt by ng them in the malignant work of slander & detraction. ir intended mischief returns upon their own heads, & slandered character of the innocent & just shines forth increasing lustre. Let the stranger find an hospitable ng place under thy roof. Give him to eat from thy ion that when he departs he may bless thee & go on vay rejoicing.

Industry will Say not to thyself I will indulge inactive idleness & lie upon the bed of sloth & slumber away precious moments of time, for in this thou art unwise, inwise disease will attend thee, hunger will torment & Rags will be thy clothing. Let industry & economy p the measure of thy waking moments. So shall thy tanance display health & sprightliness, plenty shall supthe wants of thy family & thy reputation shall be retable.

away in disgust & abhorrence. He is covered with so mis dirt & filth that no etherial body is provided for him can he be received into the abodes of the blessed. Suf not thy bodies or thy garments to remain long besmean with dirt & filth. Cleanliness prevents many diseases & pleasant to the sight. But from a dirty filthy mortal turn with disgust & abhorrance. As the great Author our existence being is benevolent to all his offspring, so becomes us to be benevolent to our fellow beings arou us. Oou Country is one body & we are part of its mo bers. We are therefore bound to maintain their right: priviledges & the the honour & dignity of our Country the risk of our lives. Great rewards attend the bran their exploits & achievements in contending against tyre & in defending the Rights their of their Country will celebrated on the plains. But the vision now expands directs our contemplation to fix on his attributes, wil spiritual substance is commensurate with infinity. As a single particle from his substance constitutes our se how small how diminutive must we appear in the view Omniscience. We must therefore contemplate his a butes thro' the medium of his works, & admire with found reverance & adoration his wisdom goodness & por which are visible in the formation & arrangement of material bodies and spiritual beings. He requires u suplicate his favours, & when received to express our g tude. As our passions & appetites often get the assend of our reason, we are therefore bound to confess our f & implore forgiveness.

Now that you may know and keep all these the which were made known by divine inspiration, it is ordal

t on every eighth day, ye lay aside all unnecessary labour, t ye meet in convenient numbers & form assemblies, t at each assembly a learned holy man shall preside, who ll lead your devotions & explain this sacred Roll & give such instruction as shall promote your happiness in this & in the life to come. Once in three months ye shall d a great festival in every great city & town, & your ests shall sacrifice an Elk as a token that your sins deze punishment, but that the divine mercy hath banished m into shades of forgetfulness.

Be attentive oh man, to the words of truth which have n recorded & & respect to all the commandments which be been written for your observance. Your Maker will a be rejoiced to see you rejoice in the participation of favour & to behold your faces brighten with the cheerbenign beams of cheerfulnesss.

AN ACCOUNT OF BASKA CHAP VIII

Among the great & illustrious characters who have eared in the world in different ages as instructors & reners of mankind, Baska holds is entitled to a conspicuous ce.

The place of his nativity is not recorded. But the first ice which is given of him is his appearing at the great y of Golanga, which is situate on the Banks of the Siota er. He was attended by his wife & two little sons. It is fashion of their garments were different from the nast. Their complexion likewise was of a little whiter. It were Baska was grave solemn & sedate reserved in conversation, but when he spoke wisdom proceeded in his lips. His fame spread rapidly thro' the city & country, & he was celebrated as a man of the most brilliant & extraordinary talents. He was conducted to the King introduced to him. The King asked him from what country he came. His reply was, at a great distance from the westward. He then asked him induced him to come in his country. He replied

CHAP VIII

Perhaps reader, before we describe the government of the Ohons it might be proper to relax our mind by with few sceches of Biography. The character which will be connect with the history of the learning & religion & government & laws of the Ohons is that of the great and illustrious Lobaska.

He is the man who first introduced their present methor of writing who presented them with the sacred Roll who contains the tenets & precepts of their religion, & viformed their political constitution as it respects the contains of various kingdoms or tribes under one government.

There are many anecdotes which tradition has hand down respecting this extraordinary man, which have complexion of fables the miraculous & hence I conclutely must be fabulous Such as his As for instance he is resented as forming a curious machine by which & have placed himself upon it he mounted into the Atmosphere ended a great hight & having sailed a considerable time ance thro' the air he desended slowly & received no hage & that multitudes of astonished Spectators had a nber of times seen him perform this miraculous exploit, nat he declared that when he took these excursions, his raordinary wisdom & knowledge was communicated to 1. If he did in fact perform such exploits no wonder t he managed an ignorant people as he pleased. But as s not my intention to amuse my readers by a splendid ation of fables, I shall confine myself to facts which canbe contested. The place of his nativity is not recorded. e first account given of him was his appearance in the at City of Golanga which is situate on the Banks of the ta River. When he entered that city he was attended his wife & four sons the the eldest of whom was about hteen years of age. He himself appeared to be about ty. His personal appearance was commanding being midling Stature of a bold frank countanance & eyes ely & penetrating. In his general deportment he was erful yet displayed much sedateness & gravity. He s affable & familiar in conversation but not loquacious, never would converse long on trifling subjects, had a inderful faculty to intermix some wise sayings & reirks that should improve & of turning with dignity and avefulness the attention of the company to subjects that ere important & interesting. None could then withstand energy of his reasoning, & all were astonished at the renuity of his arguments and the great knowledge and sdom which he displayed. His fame spread thro' the ty & multi & country & multitudes frequently assembled importuned him to give them instruction. Always eerful to gratify the curiosity & comply with the reasonable requests of the multitude, he entertained them by con versing with them familiarly, & by exhibiting public dis courses. All were charmed with his wisdom & eloquence and all united in pronouncing him to be the most extraor dinary man in existance, & generally believed that he ha conversation with the celestial beings, & always acted up der the influence of divine inspiration. The people were very liberal in their donations, which enabled him to sup port his family in affluence. Having thus in a short time established a character with respect to wisdom & eloqueno to any man who had ever appeared before him in the man tion, he then at an enterview which he held with the king & the chiefs told them that he had invented the art of ex pressing ideas by certain marks or characters, and having explained the nature of the subject to their full satisfaction he then proposed to establish a school for the instruction of the sons of the principal subjects of the King. This pro posal was received and accepted with much gratitude & cheerfulness. A house was immediately prepared for the accommodation of Schollars, & in a short time the number amounted to nearly two hundred. But here it must be of served that the art of making & applying the characters the words which they represented, was taught principally by his sons. They had all received an education from the father & even the youngest who was but eleven years of could read & write with great correctness. & facility. superintended their instruction & very frequently gave them lectures on scientific & moral subjects, his schollar made great progress in learning & delighted their parent with the improvement they had made in literature civilize tion & refinement. He still continued to associate amou the people, & was indefatigable in his labours to dispel the rance, correct their superstition & vices & to diffuse a e accurate knowledge of the mechanical arts. The suffacture of Iron in particular was not known. This aught a number by showing them how to build a small ace, & to cast iron ware & then to build a small forgenere refine pigs, & convert them into Iron.

He had resided among the Siotans about three years, ne happy effects of his labours were visible to all obers. A great reformation had taken place in the mor-& manners of the people, Industry had encreased, & culture & the mechanical arts had received great imvement & houses were built on a more commodious & ant construction. But not willing to stop here the beolent mind of the great Tobaska meditated a more imtant revolution. Now was the propitious era to had ed & the way was prepared for the introduction of that em of Theology, which is comprized in the sacred Roll. In the first place he read & explained the whole system he King & the chiefs of the nation, who cordially gave heir approbation & gave permission to propogate it ong the people. Under the pretense that this system s revealed to him in several enterviews, which he had in permitted to have with the second son of the great & d Being, the people did not long hesitate but received acred & divine truth every word which he taught them. ey forgot their old religion which was a confused & urd medly of Idolitry & superstitious nonsense & emced a religion more sublime & consistent, & more fraught h sentiments which would promote the happiness of nkind in this world.

Whilst the Siotans were thus rapidly progressing in ir improvements they were unhappily disturbed by the certain prospect of war. Bombal, the King of the Kentucks, a nation that lived on the south side of the great Riv. er Ohio, had taken great umbrage against Kadokam the King of Siota. This Bombal was the most haughty & the most powerful prince who reigned in this part of the western Continent. It had been the custom for several age for the King and chiefs of the Kentucks to have the exclusive right to wear in their caps a bunch of blue feathers. which designated their preeminence over every nation The Siotan princes envying them this distinguished home & considering themselves as being at least their equals as sumed the liberty to place bunches of Blue feathers upor their caps. This in the opinion of the Kentucks was ar unpardonable offense if persisted in, & a most daring insul upon their supreme dignity. A messenger was immed After a solemn Council was held with his chiefs Bombal with their unanimous consent dispached a messenger to Kadocam, who thus proclaimed.

Thus saith Bombal, the king of kings & the most might prince on earth. Ye have insulted my our honour & dignity, in assuming blue feathers which was the badge of ou preeminence. Know ye that uless you tear them from you caps ye shall feel the weight of our ven-gence.

Kadocam replied. Tell your master that a great Corpany of Wolves made an attack upon a City, to rob the citizens of their dear and elk, & they let forth their dog upon them, which attacked them with such fury, & courage that they fled mangled & torn to a most dreary swam. Here they by the most tremendous the most plainting howling, they lamented their sad disaster & disgrace.

An answer so shrewd & insulting it was expected would soon be followed by an invasion. Measures mu nediately be taken for the defense of the kingdom. baska was invited to set in council. All were unanisly of opinion that to comply with the haughty demand Bombal, by tearing the Blue feathers from their caps ild be degrading the honour of the nation & a relinquishnt of their natural right, that they were likewise sensible the most vigorous exertions were necessary to save the ntry from ruin. The opinion & advice of Lobaska was uested. It is my opinion says he that by using a little tigem, this war might be bro't to a conclusion. which l be honourable to this kingdom. We will pursue, says King your advice & directions. I shall be happy says baska to assist you with my best advice. Call immediy into the field an army of three Thousand men, proe two thousand shovels five hundred mathooks & five dred wheelbarrows, & one hundred axes. I will give ections how to make them. Not a moment was lost. e army was assembled, & impliments provided with the lost expidition. & they marched down the river. to a ain place where the Army of the Enimy must pass in er to arrive at the city of Golanga. At this place the s or mountains came within less than a mile of the river, flat or level land intervened. Here Lobaska directed t a canal should be cut from the River to the River to Hill That it should be eight feet wide & eight deep & t the dirt which they dug should be thrown into the riv-That the canal except what should be wanted to lay r thin pieces of split timber, which should be extended r the canal so weak & slender that the weight of a man uld break them down. This novel invention invention s soon carried into effect & the work compleatly finished. Every precaution was used to prevent any intelligence conthese transactions from getting to the enimy.

In the meantime Kadokam bro't into the field seven thousand more of his warriors, men of brave hearts & valiant for the battle. The indignant king of the Kentuck had by this time assembled an army of Thirty Thousant men, who were ready at the risk of their lives to vindicate th: preeminence of their nation. & the transendent dignity of their King & his chiefs. Had of this At the head of the army Bombal began his march to execute his threatenel vengance on the Siotans. As he entered their country le found the viliges deserted, & all the movable property co. veyed away. not a man or wom was to be seen until !e came in view of the army of Kadokam, who was encamped within a small distance of the Canal. Bombal halted formed his men in two Ranks, extending from the Rive to the Hill. He had a reserved core, who were placed in the rear of the main body, Having thus arranged them for battle he went from one wing to the other, proclaiming alould, we have been insulted, brave Soldiers, by the cowardly Siotans. They have assumed the blue Feath the badge of our preeminance & exalted dignity. Behold it flying in their Caps. Will your highborn souls subri to behold such Dastards place themselves on equal term with you? No, my valiant warriors, let us revenge the sult by the destruction of their puny army, & the conflag a tion of their city. Make a furious charge upon them & the victory is ours. Let your motto be blue Feather & y will fight like wolves robbed of their puppies. Hadokar had by this time formed his army 'n order of Battle close! the edge of the canal & extended them in one rank or from the River to the Hill. As the Kentucks approach: nin a small distance, the Siotans gave back & began a eat with apparent confusion, notwithstanding the preed efforts of the King & his officers to prevent their rering. Bombal, observing this commanded to rush ford on the full run, but to keep their ranks in order. s they instantly obeyed as one man, & as soon as their stept on the slender covering of the canal it gave way ney fell to the bottom, some in one position & some in ther. A disaster so novel & unexpected might have ap-I the stoutest & filled their minds with amazement & or. Nor did this compleat their misfortune of the army Bombal. An ambush of the Siotans, who lay on the of the hill opposite to the reserved Corps of the Kens, rushed down upon them in an instant. Surprize & or prevented resistance, they threw down their arms & endered. The retreating army of Hadocam immediy returned with shouting to the edge of the Canal. ir enimies, who but a moment before that themselves ncible & certain of victory, were now defenceless & olly in their power. When Lobaska was present & saw success of his stratigem, his great soul disdained revenge in enimy helpless & prostrate enimy. He conjured the ans not to shed one dop of Blood, but to be generous nerciful. Bombal had now recovered from his surprize, eeling the deplorable situation of his army, his haughty I felt the keenest anguish. Where says he is the King he Siotans? Here I am says Hadokam. What is your uest my brother? Reduced says he by a stratigem the st ingenious & artful to a situation which subjects us olly under your power, & in which you can take ample enge. I now implore your generosity & compassion for army. Spare their lives & then name your terms, & if I can comply with them without degrading the honour of my crown it shall be done. Your request says Hadokam's granted Surrender your army, & let you army return in peace. As for your majesty & the chiefs of your nation who are present, you will give us the pleasure of your company in our return to the city of Golanga, there we will execute a treaty of peace & amity, that shall be advantageous & honourable to both nations. These terms were accepted & the Kentucks returned in peace to their own Country, not to describe exploits & bloody victories, but the curious stratigem of Lobaska.

The two kings & their splendid retinue of princes having arived at Golanga, every attention was paid by the Hodokam & his chiefs to their honorable visitors. Hadokam made a sumptuous entertainment at which all were present. The next day both parties met for for the pur pose of agreeing to terms of peace & perpetual amity. What are your terms says Bombal? Lobaska, says Hadokam shall be our Arbitrator. He shall name the terms his wis dom will dictate nothing which will be dishonourable for either party. Your proposal, says Bombal is generous Lobaska shall be our Arbitrator. Lobaska then rose. At tend, says he to my words, ye princes of Siota & Kentuck You have all derived your existence from the great Fathe of Spirits, you are his children & belong to his great family Why, then have you thirsted for each others' blood? for the Blood of Brothers? & what has, & what has produce this mighty war? A blue feather, may it please you majesties, a blue feather a badge of preeminence. It ? pride, it is unruled ambition & avarice which devastate the world & produce rivers of human Blood. & the wal ch take place among nations generally originate from as ng causes as the blue feather.

Let this be the first article of your treaty that any permay wear a blue feather in his Cap, or any other feathat he pleases.

Let this be the second, that the individuals of each namay carry on a commerce with each other, & that they be protected in their persons & property.

Let this be the third, that I shall be at liberty to essh a school or schools in any part of the dominion of tuck & furnish them with such instructors as I please t none shall be restrained from hearing our instructions at we shall be patronized & protected by the King & hiefs.

Let this be the fourth, that perpetual peace & amity remain between both nations & as a pledge for the fulnt of these articles on the part of the princes of Kenthat the eldest son of the King & four sons of the princhiefs, shall be left as hostiges in this City for the of Term of Three years. These terms met the corapprobation of both parties & were ratified in the most nn manner.

Thus happy was the termination of the war about the feather having taken place Lobaska proceeded with fatigable industry & perseverance in his benevolent me of enlightening & reforming mankind. And how by would it be for mankind if all wars about as trifling es as this might terminate in the same way. The belent mind of Loboska soared above trifles viewing all kind as brothers & sisters he wished the happiness of the then made provision in the treaty with the Ken-tucks for the introduction of schools in Kentuck among them. This was the first step which he foresaw would it troduce improvement in agriculture & the mechanical art produce a reformation in their morals & religious principal & a happy revolution in some part of their political it stitutions.

Bombal had become so captivated with Lobaska, the invited him to bear him company to his own dominion He consented, & when he had arived at the royal City of Gamba, which is situate on the River Kentuck, he then pursued the same course which he had done at Golanga, his success answered his most sanguine expectations. The people were now prepared for the introduction of a school He returned back to Tolanga, & sent his second son & three of the most forward scholars of the Siotans to establish school at Gamba.

In the meantime his intention was to make son amendments in the government of Sciota. But as the were several Cities & a great number of viliages that a knowledged the jurisdiction of the Sciotan king which st were ignorant of the principles & doctrines which he taugh he found it necessary to visit them & to introduce instrutors amongst them. In this work he was engaged about wo years, & the happy effect of his labors were now vilible, in various kinds of improvement & in the reformation of manners morals & religion. The way was now propared to introduce his system of government. The chie of the nation were invited to attend a grand council at T langa. When they were met Lobaska rose, & presentathem with the following constitution of government.

The king of Siota shall be stiled the Emperor of Ohion the King of Siota, his crown shall be hereditary in the dest male heir of his family. The cities & vilages who knowledge his jurisdiction or who may hereafter do it, iall be entitled to protection from the Emperor. If inded by an enimy, he shall defend them with all the force the Empire. Once every year, the chiefs shall meet at olanga to make laws for the good of the nation.

These young men having imbibed the spirit & prinple of their great preceptor, spared no exertions to instruct e schollars & to diffuse useful knowledge amongst the tople. The happy effects of their Labors were visible in short time. The people The people embraced the relignoral of Lobaska & became more industrious & civilized. In eir various improvements in agriculture, the mechanical to they & literature they even exeled the Sciotans, & apared to be as prosperous & flourishing. Even Bombal muself declared that the termination of the war about the use feather, which at first appeared unfortunate, yet as it cationed such happy effects among his people, it gave m more satisfaction & pleasure than the reputation of began a great Conqueror. what he could have received from the reputation of being a great Conqueror.

CHAP. IX.

GOVERNMENT & MONEY.

The people who were denominated Ohians were steled on both sides of the River Ohio from & along various branches of the river. The settlements extended a great distance in the time of Lobaska, but how far it is mentioned. They lived in comfortable villages or tow except the cities. We might except the cities, Golanga the River Sciota & Gamba on the which River Kentu. The various villiges or towns formed independent soverties, & were governed by their respective chiefs.

Excepting the Cities of Golanga & Gamba, wh Kings claimed jurisdiction over an extent of country country of about one hundred & fifty miles along the R Ohio & about the same extent distance back from the I. er, the remaining part of this extensive country was set in compact vialiges or towns & These formed independ soveranties & were governed by their respective ch Frequent bickerings contentions & wars took place am these chiefs, which were often attended with perilous sequences. To remedy these evils & to facilitate & acc plish the general & benevolent plan, of reforming & civ ing the Ohians, Lobaska had formed a system of Gov ment, with a design of establishing two great Empires on each side of the River Ohio. Their different cons tions were on the same plan & were presented by the h of Lobaska to the respective Kings of Sciota & Kentuc The Sciotan Constitution was comprised in these words.

The country east of the great River Ohio shall form he Empire of Sciota. At the head of this Empire shall be laced with the title of Emperor, Labamack the oldest son f Lobaska. The office shall be hereditary in the eldest nale of his family. He and his sons successively shall narry natives of the kingdom of Sciota & all their daughrs shall marry within their own dominions. He shall ave four counsellors. He, with the advice of his counselrs, shall have the exclusive right, of making war & peace, of forming treaties with other nations. He shall be the bmmander in chief of all the forces of the King & the King Sciota shall be next to him. All controversies between he rulers or chiefs of the different tribes shall be reffered the decision of him & his counsellors, & he is authorized compel a compliance. He shall hold his settings annually four different parts of the Empire. The King of Sciota the chiefs of the different tribes shall hold their offices & cercise the same authority in civil matters that they have one. They shall be ameniable to the emperor & his counllors, whose duty it shall be to inquire into all complaints ainst them from their subjects & to redress grievances & mish for oppression & injustice by fines. He & his ounsellors shall have the explusive priviledge of coining oney. They may likewise lay taxes for the support of e government & for the defence of the nation. all coin no more money than what is necessary for the nvenience of the people, & in such quantity only that the lue shall not depreciate. In time of war he shall appoint e officers of his army except where the chiefs chuse to mmand their own subjects. In this case, they shall be subject to the commands of the Emperor. The people every City town or village shall respectively chuse one more Censors, whose duty it shall be to enquire into mal-conduct of rulers, & all vicious & improper conduct the priests & the people & they shall pursue such measu to obtain justice & to produce a reformation of morals in offenders as the laws shall direct.

In order that the priests & instructors of learning n know & perform their duty for the benefit of civilizati morality & religion, Lambon the third son of Lobaska sl preside over them & shall have the title of high Priest. the office shall be hereditary in the eldest males of his fa ily successively. There shall be associated with him f priests as his assistants. They shall exercise a jurisdict over all the priests of the Empire, & shall see that the faithfully perform the duties of their office. They shall tend to the instructors fo learning & shall direct that a s able number are provided thro'out the Empire. It s' likewise be their duty at all suitable times & places to struct Rulers & people in the duties of their respect Stations, & to labour incessantly to persuade manking restrain subject their passions & appetites under the gove ment of Reason. that they may secure happiness to the selves in this life & immortal happiness beyond the gr The people shall make contribution in proportion to t wealth for the support of their priests. If any refuse t shall be denied the priviledge of their instructions & s be subjected to the ridicule & contempt of the people.

For the convenience of the people & the easy sup of the government it is necessary that there govern shou should be something which shall represent prope & which is of small weight. It is therefore provided ertain small pieces of iron stamped in a peculiar manner hall be this circulating medium. Each piece according to ts particular stamp shall have a certain value fixed upon it. t shall be the peculiar prerogative of the Emperor & his ounsellors to direct the coining of these pieces, which shall e denominated money. No more money shall be coined nan what will be for the benefit of the Empire, nor shall ne Emperor & his counsellors receive any more of it than n adequate compensation for their services. They shall eep an account of the amount of money coined annually the manner in which it has been distributed & expended. his account shall be submitted to the examination of the ing of Sciota & the chiefs of the Empire. The Emperor nall always be ready to receive the petitions & complaints f his subjects. He shall consult the welfare of his people save them from oppression & tyranny & by his beneficent ts shall gain their affections & obtain the appellation of a st, a good & a glorious Prince.

When Hadocam King of Sciota had received this plan government, he immediately assembled all the chiefs or inces within his kingdom. Lobaska pointed out the dects of the existing governments, & the excellencies of that is much he presented for their acceptance. His reasons ould not be resisted, they unanimously agreed to establish as their constitution of Government. Labamack accepted to effice of Emperor & his four counsellor were appointed. ambon was ordained high Priest & his four assistants tosen. The new government was now put in operation, he various tribes living contiguous to the Empire seeing a prosperity, solicited the priviledge of being received as urts of the Empire. Their requests were granted. Improvement & prosperity attended them. This induced other contiguous Tribes to request the same priviledge, & other still adjoining them came forward with their petitions. It were granted & the same regulations established in every part. Within about three years from the first establishment of the Empire, Lobaska had the pleasure of seeing his seriegn over a territory of more than four hundred miles length along the River Ohio, & of beholding a nation raidly progressing from a state of barbarism, ignorance wretchedness, to a state of civilization & prosperity.

Having now beheld the happy result of his experimat Sciota, Lobaska made a second viset to Bambo king Kentuck. The second son whose name was Hamba was present at the city of Gamba at His youngest son K attended him. He made known his plan of revolution Bambo, who cordially acquiessed & called together princes. They unanimously agreed to place Hamback the throne of the Empire south of the Ohio River, & ordain Kalo as their high Priest. With the exception names & places the constitution of government was same as that which the Sciotans adopted. The same me ures were purpued to insure its success. A great & flouring Empire arose & barbarous tribes connected themsel with the Empire, & under the fostering care of the government became wealthy civilized & prosperous.

Thus within the term of twelve years from the ar of Lobaska at Golanga, he had the satisfaction of behold the great & benevolent objects which he had in view complished. He still continued his useful Labours & the great Oricle of both Empires. His advice & sentime were taken upon all important subjects, & no one ventuto controvert his opinions. He lived to behold the succeful experiment of his institutions, & to see them acquire strength & firmness as not easily to be overthrown.

Having acquired that renown & glory which are beyond the reach of envy, & which aspiring ambition would despair of attaining, at the age of eighty he bade an affectionate adieu to two Empires & left them to lament in tears his exile—exit.

These two empires continued to progress in their improvements & population, & to rival each other in prosperity during the reign of Ten successive Emperors on the throne of Sciota. Peace & harmony & a friendly intercourse existed between them. No wars took place to disturb their tranquillity, except what arose from the surrounding Savages, who sometimes disturbed the frontiers in a hostile manner for the sake of gaining plunder. But these attacks were generally repelled & defeated, without much loss of blood. They were in fact of such trifling consequence as to make no perceptible impediment to prevent the population improvement & prosperity of both Empires, & happy, thrice happy would it have been for them if they had still continued to have pursued the amicable & benevolent principles, which first marked the commencement & progress of their institutions.

MILETARY ARRANGEMENTS, AMUSEMENTS, CUSTOMS & EXTENT OF THE EMPIRES.

The customs & amusements of a Nation evince the state of society which exists among the people. When the two Empires of Sciota & Kentuck had commenced their new career on the plan which was formed by Lobaska, they adopted as a true maxim that to avoid war it was ne essary to be in constant preparation for it. It was the wi policy of of the two governments to make such militar arrangements as never to be surprized by any enimy unpr pared. In every city town & vilige the people were required to provide military impliments, & to deposit them a secure place. These magazines were to contain a sufficient quantity of arms & warlike implements to furnis every man who should be able to bear arms should be detitute. In order that every man might have sufficient ski to use them to advantage, great pains was taken to preparhim by teaching him the arts of war.

The knowledge of military tackticks as they it we then attainable, was likewise diffused among the peopl. Young men from sixteen to twenty five years old were required to take the field four times in each year. & to spen sixteen days during each time in learning the military ar & in building fortifications. And very able-bodied me were required to spend eight days in each year in the same employments.

In consequence of these regulations a rivalship existe among the different sexions of the Empire to exceed eac other in skill & dexterity in their military manoevers. Hence it was a general custom in every part of the country for different bodies of men to meet to engage in feigned battle once every year, in order to make a display of their in provements in the art of war. Premiums were given to those who were the most expert in shooting the arrow of in managing the spear & the sword. Their amusement were generally of the athletick kind, calculated to improve their agility & strength & prepare them for warriors.

Wrestling, slinging, & throwing stones at marks, leaping ditches & fences & climbing trees & pricipices were some of their most favorite diversions. And as they took great pains to perfect themselves in these exercises, it would astonish Spectators of other nations, to observe the improvement they had made & the extraordinary feats of agility & strength which they exhibited.

Other diversions which had no tendency to fit them for war they seldom practiced, except when in the company of women, being taught by their religion the social virtues, they manifested a great regard for the rights of the other sex & always treated them with attention civility & tenderness. Hence, when in the company of the fair sex it was curious to observe that when in the company of women they easily exchanged the warriors ruged & bold attitude of the bold warrior for the complasant & tender deportment of the affectionate galant. The amusements which were pleasing to the female mind were equally pleasing to the men, whenever they held their social meeting for recreation. These meetings were frequent among the younger class of Citizens, whether married or single. Various kinds of amusements would frequently be introduced at such times for their mutual entertainment, but that which held the most conspicuous place was dancing. But their manner of Dancing was different from that of the polished Europians. Gracefulness & easy attitude were not so much studied in their movements as sprightliness & agility, & those tunes which admitted the greatest display of activity & sprightliness were generally the most pleasing fashionable. Hence those whose bodies were formed for the quickest movements if they keept time with the music, were the most admired. In small assemblies it was fashionable to amuse themselves with at playing with pieces of parchment. This they denominate the Bird Play. Each peice of is of a oval form & of convenient length & width & on each on is portraid the likeness of a Bird. All the birds of Presthat came within their knowledge have the honour of being represented on these pieces of Parchment. On the other pieces are portraid other birds of different kinds The whole number of the pieces amount to about sixty. These are promiscuous placed in a pack & dealt of to the company of players whose number does not exceed six. The personal them, who has the greatest number of carnivorous Birds by a dextrous management, may catch the greatest number of the other Birds & thus obtain the victory.

During these enterviews of the different sexes & even in their common intercourse with each other they are always very cheerful & sociable & often display that fondness & familiarity, which in Europe would be considered as indicative of a lascivious character, but in this country are considered as what good manners requird. Nothing rud nothing indecent or immodest according to their ideas of the meaning of these terms, are admissable in company, absolute lasciviousness would meet the most severe reprehension. When a young man wishes to settle himself in family state he proclaims it by wearing a red feather in his cap. This is considered as an admonition to the young women who would not receive him for a husband, to avoid his company, whereas those whose inclinations towards him are more favourable admit his attentions. From this num ber he selects one as the object of his addresses. He obtains an enterview & proposes a courtship. If the proposition accords with her wishes, they then agree on a time when he shall make known the affair to her parents, whose approbation being obtained, he is then permited to viset her ten times in sixty days. At the expiration of this time the bargain for matrimony must be finished. Otherwise there must be a final termination of the courtshi or a postponement of the courtship, for the term of one year, or else a The parties are at liberty during the postponement to But if the parties are pleased with each other, the contract is made & the time for the celebra performance of the nuptial ceremonies is appointed. An entertainment is provided made friends are invited & the Bridegroom & the Bride present themselves in their best apparal. The company form a circle & they take their stand in the centre. The father of the Bride speaks. For what purpose do you present yourselves They answer, to join hands in wedlock. hearts are already joined, & we have made a solemn contract covenant to be true & faithful to each other. The company then all explain. "Blessings will attend you if ye fulfil, but Curses if ye transgress. They are then conducted into a log, round which a Rope is tied. The Bride groom takes hold of one end of the rope & the Bride the other, & being commanded to draw the log into the house. They pull in opposite directions with all their might. Having worried themselves for some time to no purpose to the great diversion of the company, the parents of both parties step forward & giving them a severe reprimand, command them to draw in the same direction. They instantly obey & the Log is easily drawn to its destined place. The rest of the time is spent in great cheerfulness, & meriment. They partake of the entertainment & conclude with customary amusements. The Bridegroom & Bride are now desirous to form a family by themselves. If their parents are of sufficient ability they furnish them with a convenier house & such furniture as will be required for family use such other property as they will need to enable them to of tain a comfortable living. But if their parents are poo they receive a pittance & contributions from relations & neighbors, & are placed in such a situation that with prope industry & econimy they can live live above indigence enjoy life agreeably. At the time they enter their new hat itation they are attended by Priests & by their relation friends. They kneel in the centre of the Room & the Priest places his right hand on the head of the Bridegroom & his left on the head of the Bride. After explaining & enjoining in the most solemn manner the various duties c the married state, he concludes his injunctions with thes words. "My Dear children, I conjure you as you regar your own peace & felicity, as you would wish to acquir wealth & respectibility & set an example worthy of emita tion, that as you are now yoked together to draw in the same direction. They then rise & he presents each with piece of Parchment on which is written Draw in the sam direction All the duties of the conjugal state in their opin ion are comprized in this injunction Command.

As the Priests & the Censors were vigilent & careful to required to see that parents restrained the vices of their children & instructed them in the knowledge of their religious principles the effects were very conspicuous.

Having been early taught to restrain the govern their passions & to regard the practice of virtue as their greates good, it was generally the case that love friendship & har mony existed in families. & when parents were treated by their children with great tenderness & respect.

Parents manifested an anxious solicitude for the future welfare & respectibility of their children, & in their turn children treated their parents with respect & reverence. Nor did they forsake them in old age, but paid, provided liberally for their support &

But we are not to suppose that in the most virtuous age of the nation all were virtuous. Far from this. But with such punctual exactness were the laws executed, in the most prosperous state of the nation, that vice & impiety had but few advocates & the wicked were ashamed of their own characters. Tho' every vice was prohibited by law, yet the penalties were not severe. Murder alone was punished with death. With respect to other Laws, they were calculated to wound the pride & ambition of the transgressor, & produce shame & regret. Adultery was is punished by obliging the Culprit to wear a pair of Elk horns on his shoulders six days, & to walk thro' the City or vilage once each day, at which times the boys are at liberty to pelt him with rotten eggs. The thief is compelled to make ample restitution. For the third offense he is covered with tar & feathers & exhibited as a specticle for laughter & ridicule. Pugilists or boxers, if they are equally to blame for fighting, are yoked together at least one day, & in this situation are presented to the view of the multitude. They must wear the yoke until the quarrel is settled. Such being the nature of their penal laws & such the punctuality of executing the penalties on offenders that crimes were far less frequent in this country than in Europe, where the Laws are more severe, & offenders more often escape punishment. Tho' learning civilization & refinement had not arrived at that state of perfection, in which they exist in a great pa of the Roman Empire, yet the two Empires of Sciota Kentuck during their long period of peace & prosperit were not less happy As luxury and extravigance we scarcely known to exist especially among the commo people, an happy equality was hence there was a great sir ilarity in their manner of living, their dress, their habits manners. Pride was not bloated & puffed up with enorm ous wealth. Nor had envy fewel to inflame her hatred malice. As the two Empires were not displeased with each others prosperity & happiness & the two governments ha no thirst nor jealous of nor jealous of each others power, as the governments were not infested with a thirst for coquest, Peace of consequence waved her olive branch, & tl maligant passions lay dormant. Avarice & corruption d not contaminate the ruling powers nor bribery infest the seats of justice. The people felt secure in the enjoyme of their rights, & desirous to raise up families to partake the same blessings which they enjoyed.

We can now trace the causes of their increase & properity. To a religion which presented powerful motives restrain vice & impiety, & encourage virtue. To the difusion of a competent share of learning & knowledge to enable the people to understand their right & enjoy the pleasur of social intercourse. To the establishment of political is stitutions, which gagrded property & life against oppressing injustice & tyranny. To the knowledge which the people obtained of agriculture & the mechanical arts & the habits of industry & econimy. To the mild nature of the laws & the certainty of executing the penalty upon trangressors, & to such an equality of property as to preve the pride of wealth & the extravagance of Luxury.

such causes may be ascribed the rapid encrease of populaion, & the apparent contentment & felicity which extended hro' every part of the country of the Empires. We might dd like wise the long peace that continued & the friendly ntercourse that existed between the two rival Empires. A seace which had no interruption for the term of near five undred years. During this time their villages & cities vere greatly enlarged, new settlements were formed in very part of the country which had not been inhabited, & owns a vast number of towns were built, which rivaled as o number of inhabitants, those which existed at the time heir imperial governments were founded. Their settlenents extended the whole length of the great River Ohio p its confluence with the Mississippi, & over the whole ountry on both sides of the Ohio River, which are watered y streams which empty into it. And also along the great ikes of Eri & Mishigan, & even some settlements were brmed in some parts of the country which borders on Lake Intarion. Such was the vast extent of the country which ney inhabited, & such the fertility of the soil, that many pilions were easily fed & supported with such a plenty, & ompetence of provision as was necessary for their comfort happiness.

During the time of their rising greatness & tranquillity, neir policy led them to fortify the country in every part, ne interior as well as the frontiers. This they did partly or their own safety, provided a war should take place, & ney should be invaded by an enimy, & partly to keep alive military & improve a warlike spirit, & the knowledge of ilitary tackticks. Near every vilage or City they conructed forts or fortifications These were generally of an ral form & of different dimentions according to the number of inhabitants who lived in the town. The Rampa: or walls were formed of dirt which was taken in front the fort. A deep canal or trench would likewise be forme This would still increase the dificulty of surmounting t walls in front In addition to this they inserted sticks pier of Timber on the top of the Ramparts. These peices we about seven feet in length from the ground to top, whi was sharpned. The distance between each peice was about six inches, thro' which they would shoot their arro against an Enimy. Some of their fortifications have to Ramparts which run paralel with each other, built in same manner with a distance between of about two or the perches. Their gates are strong & well constructed for Within these forts are likewise a number of sm houses, for the accommodation of the army & inhabitar in case of an invasion & likewise a storehouse for the ception of provisions & arms. A country thus fortific containing so many milions of inhabitants hearty & rob & with habits formed for war, might well be supposed able to defend themselvs against an invading enimy. they were beat from the frontier, they would still retri back to the fortifications in the interior & there make as cessful stand. But what avails all the wisdom, the art the works of men, what avails their valour their strength numbers, when the Almighty God is provoked to chast them, & to execute his vengeance in their overthrow & struction.

CHAP. XI.

As the Sciotans'& the Kentucks had maintained with ch other an unterrupted peace & friendly intercourse for e space of four hundred & eighty years, it seems almost credible that a Cause which was of no great importance either nation, should excite their resentment against each her & produce all the horrors of war. But such was the happy effect of an affair, which had no regard to a single rson except the imperial families of the two empires & king of Sciota. As the families had were dessended m the great Lobaska, they had during the reign of all eir Emperors been in the habit of visiting each other, but each Emperor & his children were required not to marry t of their respective dominions, no intermariages had ten place. They however claimed relationship, & still ntinued to each other the appelation of our dearest & best loved Cousen.

A Cousen of this description who was the eldest son of unboon, the Emperor of Kentuck arrived at the City of langa with a small but splendid retinue of Friends. At it time Rambock, who was the fourteenth Emperor, was ing on the throne of Sciota. He received the young ince with apparent sensation of the highest pleasure, & ired no pains to manifest towards him by his treatment greatest esteem & friendship. The Emperor had an ly son whose name was Moonrod. He ordered him to end the young prince & to treat him with every token of ection & honour. They spent their time in receiving visfrom the officers of the government, in viewing curioss, & in the assemblies of the first Class of young citizens to met for recreation.

Elseon, for this was the name of the young prin was soon after his arival introduced to Lamesa, the eld daughter of the Emperor. She was a young Lady very fair & beautiful countenance. Her features & the struction of her person were formed to please the far whilst the ease & gracefulness & modesty of her dep ment, were very pleasing to all her acquaintance. mind was replenished with the principles of knowledge virtue & such was her vivacity and the ease with which expressed her ideas, that all were delighted with her versation. No wonder that this fair imperial dansel attr ed the attention of Elsion, & at their first enterview kındled a spark in his boosom, which he could hardly vent from being discovered thro his blushing countana & the embarassment he felt in conversation. He strove erase those tender impressions which she had made on heart, but in vain; every renewed enterview only ser only to fix her image deeper in his mind with & to make flame of Love more difficult to extinguish. He reasone the obsticles in the way of obtaining this young lady for partner, but instead of cooling only ser it only increased ardor of his passion, & produced a resolution that with consent of Lamesa, nothing should prevent the attainn of his wishes.

To a mind thus ardent which possessed the na courage, resolution & perseverance of Elseo, the rigigantic obsticles would vanish into vapour. Nor wallong before he found that a correspondent passion was cited in her breast. The moment she first saw him, heart palpitated, her face was covered with crimson, turned her eyes & attempted to speak, her tongue stop motion in the midle of a period. She hamed, sat dow served that she was not well. A description of this scene painted by a Sciotan bard in poetic numbers. He reprents the young Lady as recovering in a short time from is state of agitation & confusion, & as being afterwards mposed & having a better command of her passions. To llow the poet in the description which he gives of Elseon, whom he attaches a countenance & figure superior to her mortals, & qualities which produced the universal esem & admiration. would not comport with the faithful ge of history. Suffice it to say that Lamesa was captited with his person, & was impressed with those ideas & atiments that her happiness fled except when she either joyed or anticipated his company. After Elsion had mly determined to marry Lamesa, he was impatient for private enterview with her to disclose his sentiments. ais occured in a short time. They were together in one the apartments of the Emperors palace, the company had retired. I have, said he in a low voice to Lamesa, conved that opinion of you that I hope you will not be diseased if I express my feelings with frankness & sincerity. ou must, she replied, be the best judge of what it is propfor you to express. I am always pleased with sincerity. the sun, says he, my dear Lamesa, when he rises with radiant beams, dispels the darkness of knight, so it is in ur power to dispel the clouds of anxiety that rest upon y soul. The Crown of Kentuck will be like a Rock on r head, unless you will condesend to share with me the ory & felicity of my reign. Will you consent to be my arest friend & companion for life? There is nothing, she blies, would give me more pleasure than a compliance th your request, provided it shall meet the approbation my Father. But how can he consent, when our Constitution requires that his daughters should marry in own dominions? Beside, my father intends that I shal ceive the King of Sciota for my husband. By performing, says he, the cerimonies of maraige at Talanga, shall literally comply with the imperial constitution, as langa is within the dominions of your Father. But as the King of Sciota, do you sincerely wish to have him a husband? No, she quickly replies, speaks anger spar in her eyes. No. the King of Sciota for my husband. pride, his haughtiness, the pomposity of all his movem excite my perfect disgust. I should as leave be yoked porcupine. Several

These Lovers, as you may well conjecture, said n things too tender & endearing to please the taste of the common Class of Lovers. In this enterview which has about four hours, they exchanged the most transporting pression of love, made the most solemn protests vow sincerity & perpetual friendship & finally agreed that Elshould make known to the Emperor their mutual desirbe joined in wedlock. The next day he wrote to the peror as follows.

May it please your most excellent Majesty. Pe me to express my most sincere gratitude for the high fa & honour, which thro' the beneficence of your Majes have enjoyed in your dominions. I am likewise impost or request a favour, which to me would be the most prequift, that is in the power of your Majesty to bestow. I ing contracted an acquaintance with your most am'daughter Lamesa, & finding that a correspondent affect & esteem exist in our hearts toward each other & a mudesire to be united by the solemn covenant of maraig rould therefore solicit your Majesty's permission that such connection may be formed.

Such a connection I conceive, may in its effect be very alutary & beneficial to both Empires. It will unite the wo imperial families in a nearer in the bond of consanguiny, & fix upon them an additional obligation to cultivate iendship, peace & an amiable intercourse. It will strengthn the sinues of both governments & promote & promote 1 happy interchange of friendly offices. As to the objecon that might arise from the constitution requiring, that le Emperors daughters should marry in his own dominns, this according to its literal meaning can have respect lly to the place where the Emperors daughter shall mar-. If by your Majestys permission, I should marry your ughter Lamesa in your dominions it will be a literal fulment of the constitution. From this ground therefore, I nceive that no objection of any weight can arise. Will ur majesty please to vouchsafe me an answer to my reest.

Signed. ELSEON. PRINCE OF KENTUCK.

This letter was presented to the Emperor by Helicon, intimate friend of Elseon. The Emperor read it assumed aspect of deep consideration, walked the room a few ments, then took a seat & told Helicon that he might inthe young prince that he should receive an answer in en days.

But why this few Ten days, a long time for two articlovers to remain in suspense. But the Emperor must sult his counsellors, his priests & the last & most fatal ansellor of all the King of Sciota, who presumed to claim hand of the fair Lamesa. The affair became public, e popular sintiment at first favoured the connection.

The Emperors counsellors & his priests were at first clined to recommend an affirmative answer. But the in est of the Sciotan King soon prevailed. This produce different view of the subject The Counsellors percei that such a connection would be a most flagrant violat of the true meaning & spirit of the constitution, & the pri considered that it would be an act of the greatest impi as it transgress an explicit injunction of the great foun of their government & religion. This opinion had weight on the minds of a great majority of the peo The more liberal sort vindicated the cause of Elseon. I produced a great debate altercation & confusion thro' City. All were anxious to know the Emperors decisio prince the following answer to his letter.

On the tenth day the Emperor transmitted to

To our best beloved Cousen Elseon Prince of Kenti The letter we received from your highness has impre our hearts with a deep sense of the honor & benefit, where you intended uor family & Empire. At first we were clined to accept of the alliance you proposed. But have a clined & considered the subject with geat seriousness attention, we that find that to admit your Highness when the active of our Empire to marry into our family, we be a most flagrant violation of the true meaning & spiriour constitution. & an impious outrage on the sacred mory of its Founder For these reasons we must solicit of Highness not to insist on our compliance with your requirements.

As Elseon had been informed of the complexion whis affairs had assumed in the court, & thro' the City, he prepared for the alswer which he received.

e appeared to acquiesse in the decision of the Emperor. le displayed his in his countanance, his conversation & deortment, his usual cheerfulness & vivacity. He continued is amusements & associated with company with the same ise, gracefulness & dignified conduct which he had done fore. At the same time, his determination was fixed to ansport the fair Lamesa into his fathers dominions. rst enterview which he had with her after he received the mperors letter, he informed her of its contents. She embled, paleness began to cover her face, & had not Elsereceived her into his arms, perhaps she would have falen om her seat However, by a few soothing words and carses, she was restored to her former composure & recollecon. Believe me, quoth he, my Dearest Lamesa, you shall mine. This heart shall be torn from my bosom, & these mbs from my body, nothing else shall prevent our union compleat enjoyment of happiness. Can the ancient ribbling of a great sage or the degree of an Emperor preent the streams from uniting with the ocean? With the me ease & propriety can they prevent the union of our ands, since our hearts are united. With your consent, you hall be mine. Is it possible, she replies, is it possible to sregard the authority of an indulgent & beloved parent & sobey his command. This I never did. lould command you, says Elsean, to marry the King of ciota? would you obey? He might, she replies, with ore regard to my happiness, command me to plunge a agger into my heart. I cannot endure that supercilious undle of pride & affectation.

At this moment her maid entered the room & gave her letter. I received this letter, she says, from your Brother, who told me it was from the Emperor. She opened it read.

My Dearest & best beloved Daughter.

Having the most tender & affectionate reg for your future welfare & felicity, we have conclude treaty of marriage between you & Lambul the King Sciota. This alliance will be honourable to our family be productive of many benefits to the Empire. On tenth day from this time the nuptial ceremonies will celebrated, consummated in our Palace. You will be readiness & yield a cheerful compliance with our will.

Had the lightning flashed from the clouds & pier her heart, it could not have produced a more instantane effect. She fell into the arms of Elseon, the maid ran fe cordial. Elseon rubed her temples & hands & loosened girdle about her waist. Within about an hour her ble began to circulate. Elseon to his inexpressible joy felt pulse begin to beat, & percieved flashes of colour in face. With a plaintive groon, she once more opened eyes to the beams of day, & in a kind of wild distract exclaimed, Ah cruel, cruel Father, why have you doon your daughter to a situation the most odious & disgust As well might you have thrown her into a den of por pines, opossums & serpents. With such animals I co. enjoy life with less disgust & torment, than with this mig King of Sciota, and An alliance with him an honour to family, an honour to the desendants of the great Lobas What wicked counsellors have deceived my Father, & duced him to throw me into the arms of this hateful m ster? Ah, whither shall I fly & escape my barberous of tiny. I am your protector, says Elseon. I am your frie & will conduct you beyond the loving & gigantic grasp of Sambol. His loathsome arms shall never encircle my dear Lamesa. Consent to my request & we will be within ten lays at the City of Gamba. There you will be esteemed as the brightest Orniment of my Fathers Empire. No onger Oh Elseon, she exclaimed, can I refuse my consent to your proposal. When a compliance with my fathers commands will entail wretchedness & misery thro' life. Heaven will pardon my disobedience. Yes, Elseo, I will yo with you, & place my happiness in your power. rather han fall into the hands of this haughty Sambul.

What could she say more to excite the feelings of a neart struggling under the operation of different passions opposite motives. She has taken her resolution, love has gained the preeminence over every obsticle

At this resolution, Elseon was transported with joy. He now proceeded to form his plans for their flight. On he fourth day after, he called upon the Emperor & requested his permission to depart to his own Country. The Emperor importuned him to tarry & be one of the guests t Lamesas wedding. But he declined by urging as his pology the anxiety & impatience of his father for his require. Permission was granted, & the Emperor aded that as should do himself the honour to furnish the prince with n escort when he left the city. Elseon replied that as he was not fond of much parade, he would wish that the escort might not consist of the Emperors soldiers, only his riend & his daughter & with with each of them a friend. These says he, are my dearest & best beloved cousens, for whom I shall ever retain the most sincere friendship. Not ing can afford me more pleasure, says the Emperor, than comply with your request.

Elseon took an affectionate leave of the Emperor & c the second day after, being prepared for his journey he s off with his three friends & their servants. Moonro prince of the Empire, & Lamesa with her two sisters, wi each of them a friend, attended them on his journey abo twenty miles. They all tarried at a vilage over night.

Imagination alone can paint the pleasant & happescene. Elseon was transported with joy. He prest her his bosom with all the ardor of inthusiasm, & she yielded all his tender & innocent embraces with a grateful sensibity & modest resignition.

The invention & ingenuity of Elseon must now be en ployed in forming a plan for their flight to his Fathers d minions. As he appeared to acquiesse in the decision the Emperor, & had maintained the same cheerful depor ment, none were suspicous of his design. The Emperor the whole court still manifested toward him every token high respect & sincere friendship. Without any hesitation the Emperor complied with his request that his dear cou ins, the son & the three daughters of the Emperor, wi each of them a friend, should accompany him about twen miles on his return to Kentuck. The retinue of the your Prince consisted of four of his most intimate friends & the servants. He took care to send their baggage on by tv servants one day before they set out. The morning arive the sun shone with radiant splendor, not a cloud interven or was seen to float in the atmosphere. It was the four day after Lamesa had received the letters which dooms her to embraces of Sambul. The Emperor, his Counsellors, his Priests & principal officers assembled, & having invited the young prince & his friends to meet them, they entered the circle with great ceremony. The Emperor then addressed the Young Prince, thanked him for the honour of his visit & expressed his firm determination, to maintain a sincere friendship & an inviolable peace with the government of Kentuck. Elseon replied that the whole sentiments would meet the cordial approbation of his Father, who retained the same sentiments of friendship & peace toward the government of Sciota. He than thanked the Emperor & the whole assembly for the high respect they had shown him. This was done with that frankness & apparent sincerity that the whole assembly were highly pleased. The Emperor then embraced him & gave him his blessing. Customary ceremonies were mutually exchanged by the whole company, & even tears were seen to drop from every eye.

As the whole of this parade indicates no flight of Elseon & Lamesa, we must now view them with their select company of friends setting out on a short journey. All mounted on horses, they rode about twenty miles to a village where they halted. An eligant supper was provided, they were chearful & sociable, none appeared more so, that Elseon & Lamesa. The next day Elsean requested the company of his dear cousens a short distance on his journey. When they had rode about two miles they halted & proposed to take their leave of each other Lamesa & her friend, without being perceived by the company rode on. It was a place where the road turned, & by riding one rod, they could not be seen. The rest of the company entered into a short conversation & passed invitations for reciprocal visets

& friendly offices. They then clasped each others hands a bowing very low, took an affectionate farewell. But wher: are Lamesa & her friend? During these ceremonies their horses move with uncommon swiftness, her heart palpitates with an apprehension that she might be overtaken by het brother. But now a friend more dear, her beloved Elseon, with his companions, outstrip the wind in their speed. within one hour & a half they overtake these fearful Dam. They all precipitate their course, casting their eyes back every moment to no purpose, her pursuers. But pursuers had not sufficient time to overtake them. They safel arive on the Bank of the Great River. Elseon & Lames were the first that entered the boat, the rest follow. & such was Elseons engagedness & anxiety to secure his fair prize, that he even seized an oar and used it with great strength & dexterity. As their feet stept on the opposite shore, E! seon claspt his hands & spoke aloud, Lamesa is mine. Sh: is now beyond the grasp of a pompous tyrant, & the control of a father whose mind is blinded by the sordid advice of menial junto of counsellors & priests. She is mine & shall soon be the Princess of Kentuck. Their movement is no slow thro' the remaining part of their journey. They at length arive at the great City of Gamba. We may nov contemplate them as having new scenes to pass thro' No: to delineate the parade which was made at the court of Hamboon, for the reception of his son, Lamesa, & their friends, or to describe the joy that was exhibited in every part of the city on their arival, & the universal surprize occasioned by the story of the flight of these two Lovers. Suffice it to say, that those who beheld Lamesa did no blame Elseon.

As Hamboon was not very punctilious in his regard r the constitution, being possessed of very liberal sentients, Elseon found no difficulty in obtaining his consent to arry Lamesa. On the fourth day after their arival, Elon & Lamesa, with each of them a friend appeared on a age, which was erected on the public square of the City. he Emperor & Empress with his counsellors, his Priests s officers, & all his relations, with the principal Ladies of e City, formed a procession & surrounded the stage. The mmon Citizens being a great multitude, took their stands they pleased. The Emperor & Empress then mounted e stage, & united Elseon & Lamesa in the bond of wedk according to custom. & as pulling the Log was an inspensible ceremony one was provided with a rope around on the stage. The Bridegroom & Bride played their rts in pulling the rope with such dexterity & gracefulss, that the whole assembly was most pleasingly enterned. When all was ended, the whole assembly claped eir hands & cried, Long live Elseon & Lamesa. & giving ree huzzas, the common citizens dispersed. The rest reired to a sumptuous entertainment, & spent the remaing part of the day & evening in conversation, singing & creation.

CHAP XII.

The reader will recollect that Elseon & his friends left conrod & his friends in a very pleasant mood without the ist suspicion, that Lamesa & her friend had deserted them. hen they had arrived at the vilage, what was their surize when they found that Lamesa & her friend were not in the company, nor had any one any recollection of hering in company, after they had stopped to take their lea of Elseon. Moonrod & the other gentlemen immediat rode back with the greatest speed to the place where the had halted, & not finding any traces of her Lamesa conclusion was then certain that she had prefered the copany of the young Prince & was on her way to Kentuc

Pursuit would be in vain. Their only alternative v to hasten back to carry the doleful intelligence to the E Their speed was nearly equal to that of Else Without waiting to perform the customary ceremony of tering the palace, Moonrod immediately rushed into Emperors presence, & exclaimed, your daughter Lam has been seduced by Elseon to leave our company unp ceived, & has gone with him to Kentuck. Nothing but pencil of the Limner, could paint the Astonishment of Emperor. He rose, stood motionless for a moment, the staring fiercely on Moonrod he spoke. is it possible, i possible, are you not mistaken my Son. I am not, says my most excellent Father. I am not mistaken. T morning we attended Elseon a small distance from the lage where we lodged. When we had halted to take our le & our attention was all engaged she and her friend she her friend rode off unperceived by any of our company did we miss her until we arived again at the vilage. have made full search & enquiry, & find that she has all lutely gone with the young prince to Kentuck. What ingrate says the Emperor, what a monster of hipocrisy the honourable attention we have shown him demand s treatment? How has he insulted the dignity of our fan & outraged the high authority of our government. affair will demand the most serious consideration.

mesa, Lamesa, my darling my best beloved child, was it possible for you to be so deceived by that artful prince, was it possible for you to disobey the command of your indulgent father? as they stept on the covering top of the canal, the thin pieces of timber broke & they all plunged in & found themselves in an instant at the bottom of the canal. Surprised & terrified & they soon found themselves in no situation to vindicate their exclusive right to wear blue feathers in their caps. They were compleatly in the power of their enimies who returned quick upon them They demanded quarter & surrendered themselves prisoners of war. And giving up their arms, their demand was granted. In he meantime a party of Sciotans who lay in ambush, on he side of the Hill rushed down upon the reserved corps of the Kentucks, who being filled with consternation at the lireful disaster of their companions, surrendered themselves prisoners of war without a struggle. Thus in a few monents, by pursuing the stratigem or plan of Lobaska, An army of thirty thousand men were captured, & the pride & naughtiness of a mighty Prince was humbled. Not a drop of blood was shed to accomplish the whole.

Let bring upon our family such wretchedness & dishonour. Fame with her Her Thousand tongues commenced her cleasing employment, & as swift as the wings of Time she wafted the inteligence thro' the City with many distorted & exaggerated particulars. All was astonishment confuson & uproar. Resentment enkindled her indignant sparks nto a flame & the general cry was revenge & war. The Sciotan King was walking in his parlour, feeding his imagination with the pleasing prospect of his future glory . felicity. I am, quoth he to himself, honoured above all the other princes of the Empire, & even above the heair appar. ent to the imperial crown of Kentuck. Who could be ac mitted except myself to marry this fair Lamesa, the elder daughter of the Emperor, the most amiable the most and complished & the most honorable Lady in the universe This is a distinction which will place me on equal groun; with the Emperor himself, & command from all my sul jects the homage of their highest respect and reverence Besides I have a soul that can relish the charms of the beautiful maid. She will adore me as her Lord & thin herself highly honoured & exceeding happy to submit to me most endearing & affectionate embraces. But ah, might Sambul, you little tho't how soon this delightful prosper would be reversed, & that your soul would be filled with chagrin indignation & revenge. A messenger burst into his parlour & announced the astonishing tidings of Lames: elopement. She has absolutely gone, says he, to become the wife of Elseon, & the empress of Kentuck. Not the wondrous & instantaneous roar of ten Thousand thunde instantaneously thro' the atmosphere, could have produce greater surprise. His countanance was all amazement was for a moment covered with paleness, his lips quivered his knees smote together & his gigantic body trembled like the shaking of a tower under the effects of an earthquak But soon after a little silent his reflections & cogitation caused the blood to return with a ten-fold velocity into h face. it assumed the colour of redness & clinching He as sumed the attitude of terrific majesty & poured forth h feelings in a voice more terrible than the roaring of a vo cano. How have I been abused, dishonoured, insulted traged. How have my prospects of glory been instanneously blasted & my character, my character become the licule of a laughing world. What felicities of enjoying e imperial maid in my arms, adoring me for her husband e now vanished. & by whom am I thus disgraced inted & injured? By the mock prince of Kentuck, an eminate stripling, a cringing & plausible Upstart. He s robed me of the fairest orniment of my kingdom, she mesa, who was mine by solemn contract, & must he now vel in her charms which are mine, & pride himself in ose deceitful arts by which he has seduced her, & stolen r from my enjoyment? No, ungrateful & insidious monr, your triumph shall be of short duration, & this arm all viset your crimes upon your head with a ten-fold ngence. Having poured forth a torrent of the most eadful imprecations & menaces, he left his parlour & lked forth to consult his principal officers on the best an to obtain revenge.

In the meantime the Emperor, less haughty & indignt, & possessed of sentiments more humane & benelent, at an invitation to his Counsellors to attend him. They are unanimous in the opinion that the offense of Elseon quired reparation. But should war be the consequence, ne refused to return Lamesa? On this question, two of counsellors contended that an humble recantation would pair the injury done to the honour of the imperial family, the authority of the government. The other two insisted at they should demand in addition that would not be ficient But that they should demand in addition ten Mamuth which would be an adequate compensation, but they depreciated the horrors of war. In the midst of their setes which were managed with great coolness & im-

partiality, Sambul presented himself. I have come forw says he, may it please your most excellent majesty, to mand the fulfilment of that solemn contract, which made to deliver me your eldest daughter in marriage. !! has been surreptitiously carried off by the young prince Kentuck. She is mine by contract & your majesty is book to deliver her to me. I demand Let her be immediate demanded, & if the Emperor the father of the young pri shall refuse to return her, this will implicate him in same crime & be a sufficient cause of war. In that a war will be indespensible to vindicate the honour of respective crowns, & the rights of the Empire. I show then give my voice for war, & would then never sheet my sword until the torrents of blood had made expiafor the ingratitude baseness & perfidy of the young Prin An humble recantation or the delivery of ten mammo would this be a sufficient reparation for such an offense flagitious? No, the very proposal would be an insulf the dignity of our government. Can anything short of repossession of the fair object stolen, of the invaluable p felonously taken from us, be an adequate compensation Nothing short of this can heal our bleeding honour. pease the indignation of our subjects, & reinstate friends & an amicable intercourse between both Empires. Let be your demand that Lamesa shall be returned. Let a fusal be followed by an immediate declaration of war, the resources & energies of the nation be called forth. semble your armies & pour destruction upon all who sa oppose the execution of our revenge. I myself will I the van & mingle my arm with those who fight the m bloody battles. Heroes shall fall before us, their to all be laid in ruins, & carnage shall glut our indignant rords.

When further deliberation had taken place, the Emror & two of his counsellors adopted the advice of Samltodemand Lamesa & an envoy was immediately distribed to the Emperor of Kentuck with the following etter.

May it please your most gracious majesty. Nothing ald have given us more pleasure than the disposition you inifested in sending Elseon, the heir apparent to your own to viset our family. We treated him as our dearest busen & as our most intimate friend. He was invited to ociate with our children, & to consider himself whilst he ried as a member of our family. Such being the confihee we placed in his rectitude & honour, that he assumed liberty to contract the most intimate acquaintance with mesa, our eldest daughter. This produced an agreement ween them, that with our consent they would be united marriage. Nothing could have been more pleasing than th a connection. But we found that it would be a most grant violation of the true meaning & spirit of our concution, & an impious outrage on the memory of its great inder. For these reasons, we signified our pleasure that seon would not insist on our compliance with his request. appeared to acquiesse in our decision. & we afterwards ntracted with Sambul, King of Sciota to give her in marge to him.

But the after conduct of your son, may it please your st gracious majesty, did not correspond with the high afidence we placed in him. With deep regret & the most nful sensations we are compeled to declare that he has mmitted a crime which has disturbed our peace & happiness, dishonoured our family & outraged the authority our government, & the rights of our Empire. He formed a plan to transport Lamesa into your dominication accomplish this, he made use of the most insidious a He took advantage of our clemency & indescretion, & high respect we manifested toward him, & without our casent & contrary to our will, he has succeeded in transpoing to the City of Gamba. In his perfidious design. Lamis doubtless with you in the City of Gamba. A crime whof such malignity, committed against the honour & interesting to four family government & Empire demands repation. Your majesty will perceive that the only adequate raration which can be made, will be the return of Lamesa our dominions. We therefore demand that she be converted back with all possible expidition.

No other alternative can prevent the interruption that confidence friendship & peace, which have long c tinued between both Empires, & save them from the rors & calamities of war.

Signed. RAMBOCK, EMPEROR OF SCIOTA

When Hamboon had received this letter, he immately invited his counsellors to attend him, & laid it befulem, & as it was a subject of vast importance to the Epire, he likewise invited his priests & principal officerijoin them in council. The various passions appeared to erate in the course of their consultation. To avoid Hoities, with all its attendant calamities, was what they nardently desired, & some contended that if no other almative could be agreed upon, it would be for the interest the Empire & the best policy to return the princess. others reprobated this measure as pusilanimous, & coward k advised if no other reparation would be received, to retain he princess & maintain the conflict with a manly & heroic irmness. What, say they, do not honour & justice require hat we should defend the rights of the imperial family? f the Sciotan government should demand that we should end them our Emperor or Empress, would not honour imnel us to spurn at the demand, & reject it with indignation? Their present demand is as preposterous & as insulting. No satisfaction will they receive for the supposed injury, xcept that we should seize the Princess of the Empire, tare er from the bosom of her consort & transport her to Scioa. Are we capable of an act so unjust & inhuman, so base z disgraceful? As the debate was proceeding Elseon rose. Aay I says he—claim you attention a moment. Undauntd by the cruel demand & haughty menace of the Sciotan overnment, I am willing to abide your decision. orting Lamesa into our dominions when she had been nost unjustly & inhumanly denied me for a companion, is a rime so perfidious & flagitious as of such magnitude, then flict a punishment that shall be adequate to the offense. But if the Almighty, whose benevolence is infinite, has degned the union of hands where hearts are united, I have ien transgressed no divine law, but have obeyed the divine ill. I am therefore innocent of any crime. I have an ndoubted right to retain Lamesa for my wife, & no govnment on earth have any authority from heaven to tear er from my bosom. Nor will I submit to such an event, olong as the life blood circulates thro' my heart & warms y limbs. If war must be the consequence of my proceedgs, which transgressed no principle of honour justice or umanity, were both innocent & honourable, it will give e the most painful feelings. I shall deplore its calamities, but will never shrink like a Dastard from the conflict. The Sciotan King, who is at the bottom of all the mischief shall never behold me fleeing before his gigantic sword, a skulking to avoid a single combat with him. You have therefore no other alternative but either first to slay you prince, & then like cowards to send back your princess of Sciota, or else to make immediate preparations to meet the threatened vengeance, with fortitude & courage.

This speach of the young prince united the who council. & they unanimously agreed to reject the demand of the Sciotan government. A letter was written & an Envoy dispached, with instructions to attempt a reconciliation. He precipitated his journey to the court of Rambock, when he arrived, he delivered him the following letter.

May it please your most excellent Majesty. Next the welfare & prosperity of our Empire, we should rejoid in the welfare & prosperity of yours. It is therefore will extreme regret that we view the unhappy difference, which has arisen & which threatens to involve the two Empires the calamities of war.

Had you demanded a reparation for the supposed in jury which which would consist with the principles of justice & the honour of our crown & government, it should a given you with the utmost cheerfulness. But to return you have a government, it should be given you with the utmost cheerfulness. But to return you have a government, it should be given you with the utmost cheerfulness. But to return you have a government, it should be given you with the utmost cheerfulness of Kentuck would be tearing her from the arms of an affectionate his band & breaking the bond of solemn wedlock. As the compliance with your demand, will subject us to the commission of such an injustice & cruelty, it must there fore our duty to declare that we will not return the young pricess. & as such an event would destroy her happiness well as that of her affectionate consort, we shall permit be

o tarry in our dominions & grant her protection. We are nowever desirous that an honourable reconcilation may ake place, & a good understanding be restored. To effect his most important & very desirable object, we have given ull authority to Labanko our beloved brother, the bearer of this Letter, to negotiate a settlement of our difference. Provided you will receive anything as a substitute for what he object yo have demanded.

Signed. HAMBOON, EMPEROR OF KENTUCK.

The mind of Rambock was not formed for the perpetal exercise of resentment, & malice, & having conversed a onsiderable time with Labanco, who apologized for the onduct of the young prince with great ingenuity his anger bated & he felt a disposition for the negotiation of friendhip. But the indignation & malice of Sambul encreased with time, his dark soul thirsted more ardently for revenge, nothing would satisfy but blood & carnage, He employed nstruments to assist in faning the spark of resentment, & lowing them into the flames of war. Not content to repesent facts as they existed, & in their true colours, montrous stories were fabricated & put in circulation, calculated o excite prejudice & rouse the resentment of the people gainst Elseon, & the whole Empire of Kentuck. He had ecourse to a class of men who were denominated prophets conjurors to favour his designs. They had for many ges a commanding influence on the minds of a great maprity of the people. As they pretended to understand, ave art of investigating the councils & designs of the eavenly Hierarchy, & to have a knowledge of future vents, the people listened with pleasure to their represenations. predictions & tho't it impious to question or doubt neir fulfilment A small company of these necromanceers or juglers assembled on the great square of the City, & mounted a stage which was provided for them. The cit. izens attended It was a prodigious concourse of all classe; of citizens The of all descriptions both wise & simple, both male & female. They surrounded the stage & were all at tention. All anxious to learn the decrees of heaven, & the future destinies of the Empire. Drofalick, their chief prophe extended his arms & cast up his eyes to-Heaven. Quoth he Heaven unfolds her massy gates, & opens to my view: prospect wide & vast. The seven sons of the great Spiri seize their glittering swords, & swear that they shall not be sheathed till blood in torrents run & deluge the fair land of Kentuck I behold armies martialing on the celestial plain & hear warriors & heroes cry, Avenge the crime of Elseon I hear a thundering, voice proceeding from the great throne of him who rules the world, proclaiming thus, Corn shall not grow in the Sciotan fields, nor mammouth yield their milk, nor fish be taken in the snare but pestilence shall roam, unless Sciota shall avenge the crime of Elseon Drofalick ended his prophesy. Hamack then arose & ir his hand he held a stone which he pronounced transparent Thro' this he could view things present & things to come could behold the dark intriques & cabals of foreign courts. & behold discover hidden treasures, secluded from the eyes of other mortals. He could behold the galant & his mistress in their bedchamber, & count all their moles warts & pimples. Such was the clearness of his sight, when this transparent stone was placed before his eyes. He looked firmly & steadfastly on the stone & raised his prophetic voice. I behold Hamboon with all his priests & great officers assembled around him With what contempt he declares he despises all the Sciotans. They are, says he, cow-

rds & poltroons. They dare not face my brave warriors. ere I see four men coming forward bearing an image, rmed with all the fetures of ugliness & deformity. ey called Sambul the King of Sciota, the whole company reak forth into boisterous Laughing. Ah, see & they are ting off his head with their swords. Yes, & are now cking it about the palace. Here is a pole it is stuck upthat & carried thro' the City. Oh my loving sparks, lseon & Lamesa, what makes you so merry? Why Elsesays he has outwitted the Sciotans, he has got the prize he little regards their resentment. Hamack was proeding with such nonsensical visions, when the whole mulude interrupted him with a cry, Revenge, Revenge, We ill convince the Kentuckans that we are not cowards or ltroons. Their heads shall pay for their sport in kickg about the pretended head the head of our pretended loved King We will avenge the crime of Elseon. eat & good Being is on our side & threatens us with fame & pestilence, unless we avenge the crime of Elseon.

The arts of the Conjurers were the consummation of imbuls plan to produce in the minds of the multitude an thusiasm & rage for war. He now repairs to the Emror & solicits him to assemble his counsellors immediate, proclaim war & concert measures for its prosecution. he Emperor replies that they should soon be assembled, it as to war, it was a subject which reguired great considation.

Early on the next day his counsellors-priests & princil officers met him in the council room. He laid before em the Letter of Hamboon, & added observed that tho' e government of Kentuck had refused to return Lamesa, t they had offered to make to our government a recantation, for Elseon's crime, & to pay us almost any sum as reparation for our injury. The council sat silent for som time. At length the venerable Boakim arose.

I must beg, says he, the indulgence of your majesty, this honourable council for a few moments. Never did I rise with such impressions of the high importance our deliberations, as what I now feel. The great question to be decided, is peace or war. If peace can be preserve with honour, then let us maintain peace, but if not, let us meet war with fortitude & courage.

As to the great Crime of Elseon, no one presumes to prosent an apoligy. Even their own government acknowledge that he has been guilty of a great Crime. But is it of suc malignity as to require the conflagration of towns, & citic & the lives of milions to make an expiation? Can no other reparation consistent with justice & humanity be received Or must we compel in order to have an atonement made for the crime of Elseon compel the government of Kentuc to commit another crime to seperate, to tear from each otl ers embrace the husband & wife? Such a reparation; this, we cannot in justice expect. Shall we then accept 6 no other? Cannot our bleeding honour be healed without sheding blood without laying a whole Empire in ruins Such refined notions of honour may prove our own ruin,: well as the ruin of those on whom we attempt to execuour vengence The calamities of war have a reciprocal a tion on the parties. Each must expect to endure a portici of evils. how large a portion would fall to our share in car of war, it is not for us to determine. While thirsting for revenge, we contemplate with infinite pleasure, their armid routed, & their warriors bleeding under our swords the women helpless & children expiring by thousands, & the country in flames. But reverse the scene. Suppose the enimy have as much wit, as much stratagim, courage, strength & inhumanity as what we you possess, & such may be your situation. When the floodgate is once opened, who can stop the torrent, & prevent devastation & ruin. We bught therefore It was never designed by the great & good Being that his children should contend, & destroy that exstence which he gave them. they all have equal rights & bught to strive to maintain peace & friendship. This has been the maxim of our fathers & this the doctrine taught by the great Founder of our government & religion. Under the influence of this maxim, our nation has grown to an emence multitude, & contentment & happiness have been universal. But why can we not enjoy peace with honour? What insurmountable obsticles are there to prevent? Why ruely a recantation &—(word illegible)—are no compensaion for the injury? For other offenses these are accepted, & why must the offense of Elseon be singular?

The Emperors daughter we presume is happy, nor can it be a disgrace to the imperial family that she has married the son of an emperor, the heir apparent to his crown. But she was to have been the wife of Sambul, the King of Sciota We can therefore with honour to our government accept of the reparation offered. & thus preserve the blessings of peace. But if we suffer resentment, pride & ambition to plunge us into a war, where will its mischiefs, where will its miseries end? As to both empires are nearly equal as to numbers & resources, I will venture to predict their eventual overthrow & destruction.

Boakim would have proceeded, but Hamkol rose & interrupted. It was impudence in the extreme, but he had

"Such sentiments, says he, may comport with the infirmities of age, but they are too degrading & cowardly fothe vigor of youth & manhood. If we suffer insult, per fidy & outrage to pass of with impunity, we may after wards bend our necks to be trodden upon by every puny upstart, & finical coxcomb. No. Let us march with ou brave warriors into the dominion of Hamboon. This ef feminate & luxurious Court will tremble at our presence & yield the fair Lamesa unto our possession. But if they should still have the temerity to refuse, we will then display our valour by inflicting upon them a punishment which their crimes deserve. Yes, our valiant heroes shal gain immortal renown by their heroic exploits. & by the de struction of all shall who Sciota will ever after have the preeminence over Kentuck, & compel her haughty sons to bow in our presence. Let war be proclaimed. & every kingdom & tribe from the River to the Lakes will pour forth their warriors. anxious to avenge our countrys wrongs. Scarce had he done speaking. And Lakoonrod, the High Priest arose. He was in the interest of Sambul & had married his sister. He had taken great umbrage at Elseon, for say ing that the priesthood had too great an assendency at the court of Hambock. And lifting up his sanctimoneous eyes slowly toward heaven, & extending his right reverand hand a little above an horizontal position he spoke.

When the laws which are contained in our holy religion are transgressed, it is my duty as High Priest of the Empire to give my testimony against the transgression. Elseon, the heir apparent to the imperial throne of Kentuck has een guilty of Robery & impiety within our dominions. He as robed this Empire of an invaluable treasure, & as his rime is most flagicious transgression of our divine law it oust have been committed in defiance of the high authory of heaven, therefore it is an act of the greatest impiety. he injury the insult & the outrage has not been committed gainst us alone, if this was the case, perhaps we might acept of reparation; but it is committed against the throne of mnipotence & in defiance of his authority. No reparaon can of consequence be received, except it be a return of he stolen treasure, or the Blood of the Transgressor. Nothg else can satisfy the righteous demand of the Great & bod Being. He therefore calls upon the civil power to recute his vengeance, to inflict an exampleary punishment. nd as it is his cause & you are imployed as his instruents, you may be assured that his almighty arm will add rength to your exertions, & give you a glorious victory ver your enimies. The mighty atchievements of your arriors shall immortalize their names, & their heads shall crowned with never fading laurels. & as for those who all die, gloriously fighting in the cause of their country & eir God, they shall immediately receive etherial bodies, & all arise quickly to the abodes of increasing delight & orv.

He said no more. He had discharged some part of s malice against Elseon, for saing that the priesthood had o much influence in the court of Rambock. The door wo opened & it was seen that Sambul at the head of a reat multitude of citizens, had taken their stand in front of e house, all crying with a loud voice, Revenge & war. ong live the Emperor & King. We will avenge their rongs. This uproar & the harang of the high Priest determined the wavering mind of the Emperor. But the venerable Boakim & Bilhawa opposed the torrent & stood as stood firm They boldly affirmed that a war was impolitic & unjustifiable But the Their opposition however, was in vair. The popular voice was against them & the other two counsellors Hamkal & Gammack gave their vote for war urged with great vehemence that war should be declared.

In vain were all the reasonings of the venerable Boakim & Bilhawan. The other two counsellors, Hamkol & Gamanko joining the Emperor, they proceeded to make out a declaration of war. It was in these words.

War is declared by the government & Empire of Scio ta against the government & Empire of Kentuck. The Sciotans are required to exterminate with distinction of ago or sex all the inhabitants of the Empire of Kentuck. They are required to burn their houses & either to destroy or take possession of their property. for their own use & benefit This destruction is demanded by the great benevolen Spirit & the government of Sciota

Signed. RAMBOCK EMPEROR OF SCIOTA.

A copy of this declaration was given to Labanco the brother & Envoy of Hamboon. He demanded a guard to defend him against the rage of the common people, who discovered a disposition to plunge their swords into the heart of every man whose fortune it was to be born on the other side of the River. Labanco was garded as far as the River & conveyed across in safety. He repaired to Gamba & there he proclaimed the intelligence of the declaration of War & there made known all the proceedings of the Sciotan government.

ambolan, King of Chiauga was the next proud chief who peared at Tolanga, with a chosen band of warriors. He d fifteen thousand who boasted of superior strength & ility. Their countanances were fierce & bold, being true licators of their hearts which feared no danger. ere always obedient to the orders of their king, who altys sought the most conspicuous place for the display of valor. Possessed of gigantic strength & of astonishing ility, he was capable of performing the most brilliant hievements, which would almost exceed belief His mind as uncultivated by science & his passions were subject to restraint. His resentment was quick & fiery & his anger ew no bounds for expression Nothing was concealed in s heart, whether friendship or enmity, but always exhibd by expressions by expressions strong & extravagant. e had a soul formed for war. In the bustle of the camign in the sanguine field where heroes fell, beneath his nquering sword his ambition was gratified & he acquired e highest martial glory.

Ulipoon King of Michegan received the orders of the nperor twith with great joy War suited his nigardly & aricious soul, as he was in hopes to obtain great riches from the spoils of the enimy. Little did he regard the medies & destruction of others, if by this means he could of tain wealth & agrandize himself. A mind so contracted selfish, was not capable of imbibing one sentiment of generosity or humanity or even of honour. None however were more boistrous than he for war. None proclaims their own valour with so loud a voice. Yet none were more destitute of courage & more capable of treachers baseness & cruelty. Yet with the sounding epithets apatriotism, honour & valour he proceeded with great expedition to collect a chosen band, of dauntless warriors to consisted of Eighteen thousand warriors. Their mart appearance entitled them to a commanded of more generosity & valour than the nigardly & treacherous Ulipoo.

Nemapon, the King of Cataraugus made no wa prompt to comply-with the imperial requisition. Tho' prefered the scenes of peace & being very fond of study of the mechanical arts, his mind was replenished with knowledge & & he took great pleasure in promoting work of ingenuity. He prefered the scenes of peace, but could me war with courage & firmness. At the head of a select ball of Seventeen thousand men, all compleatly armed & an Not far behind appeared Ramack, the King of Geno. With Furious & resolute, he had made the utmost bidition to collect his forces. Nor did he delay a moment en his men were collected & prepared to move. At the d of ten Thousand bold & robust wariors, he appeared he place of general rendezvoz, within one day after the ng of Cataraugus had arrived. He bosted of the rapidof his movements & tho he commanded the smallest ision of the grand army, yet he anticipated distinguished rels of glory, not less than what would be obtained by it first commanders.

When these kings with their forces had all arived at anga, the Emperor Rambock ordered them to parade great plain. They obeyed & and were formed in solid ums. The Emperor then attended by his son Moonhis Counsellors & the high Priest presented himself bethem. His garments glittered with ornaments, & a ch of long feathers of various colours were placed on front of his cap. His sword he held in his right hand eing tall & straight in his person, & having a countece grave & bold, when he walked his appearance was estic. He was the commander in chief & such was the esteem & reverence, with which the whole army ved him, that none were considered so worthy of that on. Taking a stand in front of the army he brandished sword. All fixed their eyes upon him & gave profound. ntion. He thus made an address.

Brave warriors. It is with the greatest satisfaction & that I now behold you assembled to revenge one o nost flagitious Crimes of which man was ever guilty.

Ingratitude & perfedy, seduction & Robery, & the most da ing impeity against heaven have been perpetrated. with in our dominions. The young Prince of Kentuck is monster who has been guilty of these Crimes. Our mo amiable daughter Lamesa he has seduced, & contrary our will has transported her into his own country. Wis ing to avoid the effusion of human blood, we offered withhold our revenge, if the Emperor of Kentuck woi restore our daughter. But he has refused. He has imp cated himself & all his subjects in the horrid Crimes of son. You have done well my Brave we riors that you have assembled around the standard of you Emperor. I will conduct you to the field of battle & dir. your movements. My son Moonrod, whose arm like m not enfeebled by age, will mingle with the boldest comtants & lead you on to victory. By the most valorous ploits by blood & slaughter, we will convince our enimies at we are not cowards & paltroons. Their ridicule & deion shall be turned into mourning & lamentation. & we ill teach their effeminate & luxurious government not to spise the hardy & brave sons of Sciota.

In full confidence that we shall gloriously triumph & d immortal lustre to our names, we will now march forurd we will & avenge the injuries done to the honour of r imperial government & the rights of our Empire & all celestial beings above shall rejoice in the execution of rine vengeance.

He said no more. The whole army with one voice oclaimed Long live the Emperor. We swear that he all never find us Cowards & Poltroons. The Emperor n ordered them to march by divisions & each king to d on his own subjects. They began their march toward land of Kentuck. Their provisions & baggage were rne on the backs of mammouth. Each man had a sword his side & a spear in his hand. & on their breasts down their hips & on their thighs they wore peices of mamuth skin to guard them from arrows & the weapons of th. & on their Caps they wore bunches of long feath-Their garments were short so as not to encumber m in Battle. And here we will leave them for the present & take a w of the proceedings in Kentuck.

When Labanco had presented to Hamboon the E peror of Kentuck the declaration of war & related the p ceedings of the Sciotan government he immediately sembled his counsellors who unanimously agreed to mathe most active & vigirous preparations for war. The E peror sent forth his mandates to all the princes of his E pire requiring them to assemble the most courageous w riors in their respective kingdoms & to march to the C of Gamba. All the princes of the Empire were quick obey the requisition of their Sovereign. The army sembled & paraded on a great plain before the City. Haboon attended by his two sons Elseon & Hanock, & by counsellors & three of his principal priests, walked out the city & presented himself before his army.

His garments were of various colours & his Cap v adorned with a bunch of beautiful Feathers, which wav high in the wind. In his left had he held a spear & in right a sword. His countenance was bold & resonute, such was his gracefulness & eloqution, when he spoke thall eyes were fixed upon him. & all ears were attention

Brave warriors My brave sons says he, I extremely gretted the necessity of calling you from your peaceful eployments to engage in the bloody scenes of war. I such is the violence the malice & ambition of the Scior government that nothing will satisfy them but hostilit between the Empires. They have proclaimed war ever war of extermination against our dominions. Nor was in our power to prevent this most dreadful calamity, unly we tore as under the bond of wedlock between the prince princess of the Empire. & transported her like a Cultinto their dominions. This was the only alternative who they offered to accept, to prevent this terrible crisis.

hy the rigor of this demand? Was it because the young rince had violated any law either human or divine? No; was because the King of Sciota had fallen in love with e Princess, & wished to have her for his wife. But as e viewed him with the utmost hatred & disgust, he has en disappointed. To gratify his malice & revenge, he s roused the Sciotans to take arms, & threatens to deluge r lands with the blood of our citizens & to lay our counin ruins. It is a war on their part to gratify malice & venge & nothing will satisfy their malignant passions but r compleate extermination. On our part it is a war of f defense of self preservation, a defence which will exd to our wives & our children, & to all the blessings & dearments of life. We must either submit to behold our arest friends expiring in agonies our property torn from & our houses in flames & our dearest friends expiring in onies & even like cowards suffer them without resistance cut our own throats or we must meet them like men demined to vindicate our rights, & to retaliate all their inded mischiefs. Nor need we fear the event of the cont. Infinite benevolence will reward our situation. & int us that assistance which will give success to our efts. You, my brave sons will be inspired with courage, ir hands will be strong for the Battle, & their warriors Il fall before you like corn before the reapers sickel. ith all their mighty boasting & high confidence in their berior cunning & prowess, they are men formed of the ne materials which we possess. Our swords will find a sage to their hearts, & the vital blood gushing forth y will fall prostrate at our feet. Let us march then with rage to meet the implacable foe, determined either to gloriously fighting or to obtain victory.

Having thus spoken, the whole army with a lovoice replied, Victory or death. Lead us on to victory the head of this army which consisted of one hundred fifty thousand men, he marched toward the great Rive They arived at the bank & beheld the Sciotas all busy employed in making preparations to cross the River.

The Empress, the Princess Lamesa, & the Empers daughters attended by a few friends & their servants rived at the place where the army was encamped. soon as Elseon heard the news of their arrival, he hasten to the place & found the company had alighted at an hold & that Lamesa & her friend Holika were in a room themselves. As soon as he entered Lamesa arose. gloom & anxiety which were for a number of days played visible in her countenance at his appearance wa dispelled. He received her into his arms with an affection ate embrace, & expressed the greatest pleasure at seeing once more. The tears ran down her cheeks, for a more she was silent, she raised her head & replied. O Elsen were it not for you I should be the most wretched being existence, & yet my love for you has been the cause of my present affliction. If I had never seen you, those be rid prospects which now present themselves to my vie would never have been. But you are innocent, nor ari guilty of any crime. Buth how can I endure to behold the lamities which must fall upon both nations in consequent of our connection? Two empires at war, spreading carna & ruin, warriors bleeding on the field of Battle, innoce women & children perishing in the agonies of death, towns & cities in flames. Ah horrid prospect. Have i & I my dear Elseon produced these dreadful calamities? our conduct the cause which must We are not says he, ar Lamesa responsible for for the horrid effects of malice revenge which may be occasioned by our innocent connect. If men will be so indignant towards each other, because we do right as to massacre & do all the mischief they n, we may deplore their weakness & depravity, but have more reason, to make ourselves unhappy on that actunt than if these effects were produced by some other use. They alone are responsible for their crimes & have uson for unhappy reflections.

But how can I endure, says she, to see my dearest ends become each others implacable enimy? To see em mutually engaged to destroy each others life? My ther for whom I ever had the greatest affection, & my ly Brother are now at the head of one hostile army, & ur father & you my dearest husband are at the head of other. When these armies meet, should you not plunge ur sword into the heart of my Father & my brother, & ruld they not do the same by you if in their power? hen such scenes present themselves to my view, they are my soul like dagers. & produce the keenest anguish. That I could fly to my Father & on my bended knees impre forgiveness.

Yes, says Elseon, when you have done that, he will be you to the mighty Sambul for his wife.

No, never says she, never would I submit. I abhor monster more than ever. He is the most malignant undrel in existence. To gratify his revenge whole Emes must be laid in ruins. What punishment more just n that he himself should fall in battle. & endure the mies which his vengeful soul is bringing on others? But for my Father & my Brother, they have by his artifice in deceived. I conjure you if you have any regard for my happiness, not to take their lives if in your power. Rather than that my hands should be stained with the bloof your dearest friends I will present my bosom to the swords. There lives, says he, are safe from my sword, thark, there is an alarm. An expressarived & informed he that the Sciotan army had found means to get their boldown the River in the night unperceived, & had land without opposition about three miles below them the Ketuckian encampment Elseon then embraced his wife & sawhen your protection & my own honour call I must obe He left her in tears imploring heaven to protect him, & ruing swiftly to the army he took his station.

Hamboon mounted on an eligant horse richly capitisoned, rode thro the encampment proclaiming aloud, ever man to his station. Seize your arms & prepare for Batt All his princes quick to obey his commands instantly repaired to their respective divisions. & gave orders to for their men into solid collums. When this was done, the marched a small distance to the pl & paraded on the gree plain of Geheno. They were now prepared for the hosti engagement. Their officers of the highest Ranks marched along their in front of their divisions & by their speech they inspired the men with boldness & courage. The ardently wished to behold their enimies, & to have an oportunity of displaying their valour in their destruction Hamboon then commanded his principal officers to assemb round him. When they were collected which was in front f the army, he thus addressed them.

theroic commanders had each a chosen band of warriors, who were ordered as soon as the battle should begin to narch between the divisions & charge the enimy. in order beak their order & throw them into confusion The deign of this arrangement was to break their ranks & to hrow them into confusion.

The command of these bands were given to Elseon, Labanco Hanack & two counsellors of the Emperor, Hamul Taboon. The momentous period had arived. Each rand army were now ready, were anxious for the Comat, & sanguine in their expectations of obtaining a glorious ictory. Musicians with instruments of various kinds were ow playing thro' every division of both Armies. They lowed horns pipes & a kind of trumpet, & beat with sticks n little tubs whose heads were formed of parchments. The melody was truly martial & calculated to inspire each varrior with an ardent desire for battle & the most daring eroism. All was hushed. The musicians fell back in the ear. There was a perfect silence thro' both armies. Each Emperor with their swords brandishing rode were in front facing their respective armies. Near three hundred housand spears were glittering with the reflection of suneams. Not a cloud to be seen in the east. The sun shone with unusual brightness, in the west a dark cloud began to rise & distant thunder was heard to rumble. Hambock proclaimed with a voice which was heard from the right to he left March march my brave warriors, & fight like neroes. Hamboon saw them beginning to move but not changing his countenance, which was placid & bold, he proclaimed, Stand firm my brave sons. Let your arrows fly thick against your enimies as they advance & finish with your spears & your swords their destruction. The Music again played & both armies gave a tremendous shour Spears & swords

When the Sciotans had advanced with a firm & mode ate step, within a small distance of Hamboons army, the both armies discharged arrows with with such unerring aim & celerity that many brave warriors on both sides fell prostrate. Others were sorely wounded & retired back in the rear. Their places were immediately supplied & the second Rank coloped & took their stations in the fron: Each man fixing his spear horizontaly & about as high his breast the Sciotans rushed forward with heroic yels horrible shoutings & made a most tremendous & furious charge upon the Kentucks. They received them wit: firmness & courage spears met spears & many were bent di broken & others were thrust on both sides into the bodies of heroes, whose blood gushing forth they fell with horri groans pale & lifeless on the sanguine plain. Neither arm, gave back, but being nearly equal as to strength & numbers they poured forth upon each other with a lavish hand the impliments the weapons of death & destruction Determine to conquer or die, it was impossible to conjecture which Emperor would have gained the victory had the division or bands in the rear of each army remained inactive. But anxious to mingle charge with the boldest warriors, the Kentuck bands led on by their heroic princes rushed between the divisions of the grand army & made a most furous charge on the Sciotans. They broke thro' their ranks beircing their indignant foes with deadly wounds. Heroes ell before them & many of the Sciotans being struck with urprise & terror, began to retire back. But the bands in he rear of their army instantly rushed forward, & met heir furious combatants. The battle was now spread in very direction. Many valiant chiefs who commanded uner their respective Kings, were overthrown & many housand robost & brave warriors, whose names were not istinguished by office, were compeled to receive deadly vounds & to bite the dust. It was Elseons fortune to ttack the division led by the valiant Kamoff. He broke is ranks & killed many warriors. While driving them uriously before him, he met Hamkol at the head of many Phousand Sciotans. Hamkol beheld the young Prince & new him & being fired with greatest rage & thirst for evenge, he urged on the comabat with the most driving iolence. Now, he that was a favourable chance to gain nmortal renown. Elseon, says he, shall feel the effects of by conquering sword. The warriors on both side charged ach other, with incredible fury, & Elseon & Hamkol met n the centre of their divisions. I have found you says Iamkol perfidious monster, I will teach you to rob our Empire of its most valuable treasure. He spoke & Elseon eplied. Art thou Hamkol, the counsellor of Hamback. Cour advice has produced this blood & slaughter. Hamol raised his sword & had not Elseon defended himself rom the blow he never would have spoken again. But, uick as the lightning Elseon darted his sword thro' his eart Hamkol He knashed his teeth together & with a roan tumbling headlong with a groan expired.

The battle raged. Labanco attacked the division of sambul. His conquering sword had killed two chief &

his band performed the most brilliant exploits Sambul m him & like an indignant panther he sprang upon him while Labanco was engaged in combat with another chi-Sambul thrust his sword into his side. Thus Labanco fe lamented & beloved by all the subjects of the Empire Kentuck. Hamack His learning wisdom & penetration mind, his integrety firmness & courage, had gained him universal respect & given him a commanding influence over the Emperor & his other Counsellors. He was viewed wit such respect & reverence that the death of no man coul have produced more grief & lamentation & excited in the minds of the Kentuck a more ardent thirst for reveng The officers of his phalanx exclaimed Revenge the deat of Labanco. Even lightning could not have produced more instantaneous effect. With tenfoldrage & fury h warriors maintained the conflict & redoubled their efforts spreading death & carnage. Even The mighty Samb trembled at the slaughter of his subjects warriors & began to despair of victory he began to fearing that his intended revenge was turning upon his own head. During the slaughter of Sambuls forces Hamack was engaged in ba tle with Habelan King of Chiauga. No part of the wa raged with a more equal balance. Warriors met warrio with such equal strength & courage, that it was impossible to determine on which side was the greatest slaughter, ever their heroic chiefs prudently avoided a combat with each other & emploid their swords in overthrowing those of le distinction. The field was covered with the bodies of hero besmeared with blood, which was spread thick on every side. In the mean time Hamul & Taboon who led on the other reserved divisions of the Kentucks were fiercely er gaged in spreading the war thro' the ranks of the Sciotat Iamul compelled to the division commanded by Sabulmah fall back, but still they fought as they slowly retreated, being reinforsed by a body of troops in their rear, they ontinued the conflict & maintained their position. The aughter was emence & each party boasted of the most rilliant atchievements.

Taboon made his attack on the division of Ulipoon, ommanded by Hamelick. The Sciotan ranks were broken they must have fled in confusion had not Rameck suported them with his division, warlike band. The contest bw became bloody furious & equal feats of valour were splayed by contending heroes. The thirsty earth was rerspread with the dead & dying bodies. of thousands & ciated their its thirst by copious draughts of human blood. amelick himself was slain, but not until his sword was imsoned with the blood of enemies But The dubious war peared at last determined. Hamback beheld his army ving ground on every hand. He rode throout their visions & endeavored to inspire them with persvering urage. But in vain. They could not withstand the imtuosity the numbers & strength of their Enimies. Aided the advantage they had obtained by the arrangement ey had made to manage the conflict. The Sciotans bein to retreat. Such was the situation of both armies, they e Sciotans must have principally have been overthrow & stroyed if the Kentucks had been permitted to continue e havoc & slaughter they had begun. But how often are e most sanguine expectations disappointed by the decrees heaven. At this awful period whilst the atmosphere as repleate with the multifarious sounds of the clashing of yords & spears, the playing melody of the martial musick

- - - the shouts of the conquerors & she shrieks & grozi of the dying, even then the heavens were overspread will clouds of the most sable hue, which had been blown free the West. The thunders roared tremendously & the flash of lightning were incessant. The wind began to bloom from the west with great violence the hail poured dove from the clouds & was carried with great velocity full the faces of the Kentucks. They were unable to see the enimy, or continue the conflict. Hambook & his prince immediately rallied their retreating forces & facing roun encouraged them to fight courageously since the great good Being had miraculously interposed in their behalf The Kentuck army were unable to continue the conflict they were obliged in their turn to retreat. but such we the violence of the storm that the Sciotans could not tal any great advantage of the confusion of their enimi-They however pursued them to the hill which had been the rear of the Kentucks, overthowing & kiling some in the pursuit. But as the hill was overspread with trees, while broke the violence of the wind Hamboon commanded li men to face their pursuers, The Sciotans finding that their enimies had the advantage of the ground, & being intolet ably fatigued with the battle, which had lasted near for hours retired a small distance back. & as soon as the story abated, they marched beyond the ground which w strewed thick with the slain. Thus ended the great batt on the plain of Geheno. Both There they encamped & the storm had now subsided, both armies proceeded to mal provision to refresh themselves, being nearly exhausted h the fatcagus fatigues of a most bloody contest, which have lasted nearly five hours. That day afforded them no time to bury their dead. The sun did not tarry in his course, out hid himself below the horizon, & darkness spread itself over the face of the earth. The warriors with their spears n their hands extended themselves upon the earth, & spent he night in rest & sleep. Next morning they arose with enovated vigour Their thots were immediately turned to he sanguine field. Many warriors say they, lie there sierced with mortal wounds & covered with with blood. Their spirits have assumed etherial bodies, & they are now eceiving the rewards assigned to the brave on the plains of lory. But they demand of us that we should secure their emains from the voracious jaws of carniverous beasts nimals by intering them in the earth. But how can this e done unless both armies will mutually agree to lay down neir arms during the interment. of the remains of their repective warriors. Hamboon dispached a messenger to lambock who agreed to an armistice for the term of two ays, & that ten thousand men might be emploid from each my in burying the dead. It was indeed a melancolly day. he conquest was not desided. Neither army had gained victory, or had reason to boast of any superior advantage btained or any heroic atchievements which were not atched by contending warriors. an emence slaughter was ade. Hear one hundred thousand were extended breathss on the field. This was only the beginning of the war what must be the dreadful calamities if it should connue to rage? If a few more battles should be faught, & e enfuriated conqueror should turn his vengeful sword ainst defenceless women & children & mingle their blood ith the blood of heroes, who had fallen bravely fighting their defence. When both armies viewed the the emencejughter that had been made of their respective friends, instead of cooling their ardor for the war it only served their encrease their knowledge & their thirst for revenge.

Ten thousand men from each army without arm marched to the field where the battle was faught, & having selected the bodies of their respective warriors, they carried as many of them together as what could be done with con venience & then diging into the ground about three fe deep & throwing the dirt around in a circular form upon the edge of the grave they then deposited the bodies in covering the ground over which they had dug with the bodies & then placing others pon them until the who were deposited. They then proceede to throw dirt upon them & to raise over them a high mound. In this mann: they proceeded until they had finished the interment The bodies of the chiefs that were slain were carried to the respective armies, & porforming many customary solemniti: of woe, they were intered & prodigious mounds of ear were raised over them. After the funeral rites were finished & the armistice had expired, the hostile Emperors mus now determine on further plans of operations.

The field was widely strewed & in many places thick covered with human bodies extended in various position on their sides their backs & faces. Some with their arrived & legs widely spread, some with their mouths open & eystairing. Mangled with swords spears & arrows & based of the swords with blood & dirt. Most hideous forms & dreated to behold. Such objects excited horror & all the sympathetick & compassionate feelings of the human heart A both Emperors had agreed to the suspension of arms for e purpose of burying the remains of these of the heroic arriors, ten thousand men from each army entered the ld & began the mournful employment. They dug holes out three feet deep & in a circular form, & of about enty or thirty feet diameter. & in these they deposited bodies of their decesed heroes & then raised over them ge mounds of earth. The bodies of the chiefs who had len were carried to their respective armies, & buried with the solemnities of woe. Over them they raised prodigs mounds of earth, which will remain for ages as monunts to comemorate the valiant feats of these heroes & reat battle of Gaheno.

After the funeral Rites were finished, & the armistice ing expired, the hostile Emperors must now determine further plans for operation. Hamback requested the rice of his principal officers, who were unanimous in their nion that it was their best policy to retire back, to the , which was opposite to the place where they landed, & re wait for reinforcements. This they effected the next ht without being prevented by their enimy. Hamboon next day marched toward them, but not thinking it d policy to attack them at present took possession of the in plain view of the Sciotans & there encamped with whole army. As the Sciotans sallied out in parties to ider & to ravage the country, these were pursued overn & met by parties of the Kentucks Many bloody mishes ensued with various success, & many feats of pism were displaid on both sides. Wherever the Sciomarched, devastation attended their steps, & all classes beople without distinction of age or sex, who fell into r hands became the victims of their infuriated malice. extermination of the Kentucks appeared to be their oject, not considering that it might soon be their turn have such cruelties retaliated upon themselves with thre fold vengeance. They likewise had a further object view, hich was to provoke Hamboon to attack the mi army, whilst posted in an advantageous situation But it vi Hamboons policy by placing garrisons in different statical & by patroling parties to prevent the Sciotand from pla dering & destroying his towns, & from obtaining provision from his country & in this way to compel them to cross river or to attack his army in the posotion he had tak: While the two Emperors were thus manoevering & ses ing by various arts & stratigems to gain an advantage of each other, a very extraordinary incident of heroism & display of the most sincere & ardent friendship transpir. displayed transpired which is worthy a place on the histor page Insidents transpired of heroism & friendship. In dominion of Hamboon there lived two young men wl were bred in the same village, having minds formed for exercise of the noblest principles & possessed of congeri tempers. They early contracted the greatest intimacy formed towards each other the strongest attachment. TI joined the standard of Hamboon & in the great battle Gaheno they faught side by side & performed exploration equally bold & heroic they eat at the same board & drag of the same cup & in all their excursions they attended e other, & walked hand in hand. As these two friends w: seting in their tent one evening, Theljard who was the d est says to Hamkon something whisper to me that it night we can perform a most brilliant exploit The Sciots have held a great festival & until midnight they will employed in singing & in dancing & in various diversion Being greatly fatigued, when they lie down to rest the eep will be sound. We may then enter their camp by yly getting round them by their centinels unperceived & ake a most dreadful slaughter. Your plan replied Hamon is excellent. It is worthy of the character of an hero. will join you. I will either triumph with you in the sucss of the enterprize or perish in the attempt. Perhaps we ay atchieve a glorious deliverance to our Country by devoying our cruel enimies. They both taking their swords tomehauks repaired toward the camp of the Sciotans, in der to reconoiter & find where they could enter & not be received by the Centinals. The Moon shone bright but puld set about three oclock in the morning This was the tethey had fixed upon to begin the massacer of their limies.

At length all became silent, the moon disappeared & se young heroes had accomplished their plan in getting o the camp of the Sciotans unperceived. They found m lying in a profound sleep, for the fatigue of the day revels of the night had bro't weariness upon them, & conering when they came down that the vigilence of their ards would secure them fro surprize, they slept with unusual soundness, but their vigilence could not prevent unsuspected destruction. The Tomehauks & swords of se daring youth soon caused hundreds to sleep in eternal mber, & so anxious were they to finish the destruction of ir enimies that the day began to dawn, before they had ared themselvs from the camp of their enimies Scarce vever had they passed the last Centinal & the alarm was en. The Sciotans beheld a most terrible slaughter of ir warriors, & being fired with indignation sallied forth parties in every direction. Kelsock & Hamook had rly gained the encampment of the Kentucks, & Ham-koon with a party of Sciotans had overtaken Hamko. K sock was so far in advance that he was now safe from danger, but turning his eyes round, he beheld Hakoon se his friend, who was attempting to defend himself again the party. Kelsock turned instantly & runing furiou back cried, Spare oh spare the youth, he is innocent. alone contrived the slaughter of the Sciotans, too mi love to his friend induced him to join in the enterpr Here is my bosom, here take your revenge. Scarce l he spoken & Haloon plunged his sword into the heart Hamko. The young hero fell & with a groan expir Kelsock instantly rushed upon Haloon & darted his sw thro' his heart. Prostrate he tumbled at the feet of Ha koo. But Kelsock could not long survive. A sp. pierced him in the side. He cast his eyes on the life body of his friend & fell on his lifeless body it, he braced it & never breathed again. Ah heroic youths friendship ye lived & in life & death ye were joined.

Forty days had now expired since the two armies taken their different positions. Each had received lareinforcements which supplied the place of the slain. Perience had taught them to use stratigem instead of attaing under great disadvantages & yet to remain long in the present situation could not possibly terminate the war scess fully on the part of the Sciotans. Rambock considing the obsticles which attended the prosecution of evident at last by the advice of Sambul & Ulipoon, determined a most rash & desperate enterprize. An enterpy which would in a measure satiate their revenge, provident it should even produce the annihilation of the arm As soon as darkness had overspread the earth at night Rambock marched his whole army toward the City

Gamba. & such was the stillness of their movements that they were not perceived, nor was it known by Hamboon that they had marched until the morning light. As soon s the Kentucks found that the Sciotans found that had bandoned the place of their encampment & found the lirection they had gone, they immediately pursued them vith the utmost expedition. But too late to prevent the ntended slaughter & devastation The Sciotans without deaying their march by attacking any forts in their way, nerely entered the vilages kiling the inhabitants who had ot made their escape & burning their houses. They rived before the City of Gamba. Great indeed was the urprize & terror & consternation of the Citizens. Many ed to the fort. A band of about three thousand resolute varriors seized their arms, determined to risk their lives in ne defence of the City. The leader of the band was amack the eldest son of Labanco. He inherited the virie of his excellent Father & even thirsted to revenge his eath, by sacrificing to his manes the bones of his cruel ennies. He posted his warriors in a narrow passage which d to the City. The Sciotan Emperor immediately rmed his plan of attack. A large host selected from all e grand divisions of his army marched against them. hey were commanded by Moonrod. He led them on gainst this galant & desperate band of Kentucks & made most furious & violent charge upon them. But they ere resisted with a boldness which will forever do honour their immortal valour. Many hundreds of their enimies ey peirced with their deadly weapons, & caused heaps of em to lie prostrate in the narrow passage. Such prodigus havock was made on the Sciotans by this small band valiant citizens who were driven to desperation & whose only object was to sell their lives dear to their enimies. , th even Moonrod began to despair of forcing his way into t City thro' this naroow passage. Being informed by treacherous Kentuck of another passage, he immediate dispached a band of about four thousand from his army enter the city thro that passage & to fall upon the rear the Kentucks. This plan succeeded. These heroes no found the war to rage both in front & rear & part facing their new assailants, they attacked their new assailants the with incredible fury. What could they do? Resistan was now in vain. They could no longer maintain t bloody contest against such a mighty host. Lamack th commanded the survivors of his little band to break the the ranks of his last assailants, & to retreat to the fort. was impossible to withstand the violence of their charg They broke thro' the ranks of their enimies, & made a pa sage over the bodies of heroes, thro' which the retreated marched to the fort. About seven hundred with their v iant leader thus made their escape & arived safe in the fe The remainder of the three thousand sold their lives in d fence of their friends & their country. This battle check the progress of the enemy which prevented an emer slaughter of Citizens, as the greatest part had opportun by this means to gain the fort. As soon as all resistar was overcome & had subsided, the Sciotans lost no tir but marched into the city & commenced a general plund of all articles which could be conveniently transport Ulipoon the careful not to expose his person to the dead weapons of an enimy, was however very industrious in t part of the war. None discovered so much engagedness himself to grasp the most valuable property in the Ci But expecting the Kentuck army to arrive soon, they me accomplish their mischief with the utmost expidition. The City they sat on fire in various places & then retired back & encamped near the fort intending on the next day, unless prevented by the arival of Hamboon with his army, to storm the fort & massacer the whole multitude of citizens which were there collected. Behold the conflagration of the city The flames in curls spread toward heaven, & as the darkness of the night had now commenced, this added to the horror of the scene. The illumination spread far & wide & distant vilages beheld the redning light assend, as a certain pioneer of their conflagration should the war contilnue to rage. But mark the sorrow & lamentation of the poor citizens now encircled by the walls of a fort. Happy that they had escaped the massacer of a barbarious unrelenting enimy, but indignant & sorrowful at beholding the ruins of all their property, & even filled with the greatest anxiety lest Hamboon should not arive in season to prevent the storming of the fort. But their anxiety soon vanished.

When the shades of evening began to overspread the earth Hamboon & his army had arived within five miles of the city. They beheld the flames beginning to spread. The idea was instantly realized that an indescriminate slaughter had taken place. What were the distracted outcries of the dwellers of the city. Fathers & mothers brothers & sisters wives & children? In addition to the destruction of all their property, they now had a realizing anticipation of the massacre of their dearest friends & relations. Such was their anxiety to precipitate their march that it was scarcely in the power of their commander to retard their steps, so as to prevent them from breaking the order of their ranks. They determined however to make the utmost expidition, & if they found their enimy to take ample vengence. But when they arived & found that the great est part of the citizens were safe in the fort, this a forde no small alleviation to their anxiety & grief. But thei thirst for revenge & their ardent desire to engage the enim did not in the least abate.

Determined that the Sciotans should have no chance to improve the darkness of the ensuing night, to make the escape, every preparation was made to attack them the next morning. This was expected by the Sciotans who were wishing for another opportunity to measure swords with the Kentucks. & as soon as the morning light appeare they marched a small distance to a hill & there paraded is proper order for battle. Scarcely had they finished the arrangements when they beheld Hamboons army marching towards them. He halted within about half a mile of the Sciotans, & sent out a small party to reconoitre & dicover their situation. In the meantime he ordered Hamachis son to march with twelve thousand men around the Sciotan army & lie in ambush in their rear in order to surprize them with an attack after the battle should commence.

As the two armies were paraded in fair view of each other the expectation was that a most bloody engagement would take place immediately. The cowardly mind a Ulipoon was not a little terrified when he beheld the numbers & the martial appearance of the enimy. But his is ventive genius was not long at a loss for an expedient which he imagined would extricate himself from all danger the repairs to Hambock & addressed him to this effect May it please your your majesty. During the first battles was my misfortune to be prevented from being at the heat of my brave warriots & displying my valour. It is my wish now to perform feats of heroism which shall place me on equal ground with the most valiant princes of your Empire. With your permission I will lead on my division & storm the fort of the Kentucks. This will fill their-warroiors with consternation & terror. You may then obtain an easy victory & destroy them with as much facility as you would so many porcupines. Besides by attacking the fort at this time when they are not expecting such a manoever, the imperial family will be prevented from making their escape & I shall be able to restore to your majesty your daughter Lamesa. The Emperor being pleased with the plan granted to Ulipoon his permission to carry it into effect. Ulipoon did not wait a moment. But immediately returned back & commanded his forces which consisted of about seventeen thousand to march. He was careful to see that they carried with them at the same time all the plunder hey had taken in the City of Gamba. & particularly that portion which had been set apart for himself. But nothng was further from the heart of Ulipoon than to fulfill is promise. He had no intention to risk his person in the nazardous attempt to storm the fort. But his determination vas to march with the utmost expidition to his own diminons. & to carry with him his rich plunder. Having narched towards the fort until he had got beyond view of he Sciotan army. He then ordered them to turn their ourse to the great River to the place where they had left heir boats. In this direction they had not proceeded far vhen they were seen by a number of pioneers whom Hamck had sent forward to make discoveries. As his band vere not far distant, they soon gave him the intelligence. Ie immediately dispacht an express to Hamboon, informng him that he should pursue them as their object probbly was to ravage the country, & recommending not to attack the Sciotans until further information from him Hamacks division were not discovered by Ulipoon & ol consequence he proceeded in his march without suspecting any anoiance from the enimy. happy in the reflection that he had greatly enriched himself by a prodigious mass of plunder & not in the least troubled about his fellow warriors, whom he had deserted on the eve of a most hazardou engagement. Hamack pursued him, but was careful no to be discovered. When the sun was nearly down Ulipoo halted & encamped. During the night, Hamack made his arrangements. He formed his men into four divisions surrounded the enimy. Their orders were as soon as the morning light began to appear to rush into Ulipoons ercampment & to massacer his warriors without discrim nation. The fatal moment had arived, & punctual at the very instant of time, the attack was begun on every part. such was the surprize & terror which it produced that the Sciotans were thrown into the utmost confusion, & it was impossible for their officers to form them into any order t make defence. Every man at last attempted to make h escape, but wherever they rushed forward in any direction they met the deadly spears of the Kentucks. It is impossible to describe the horror of the bloody scene, for ever humanity recoils at beholding. Humanity sympathy compassion must drop a tear at beholding the uproar & confusion, the distress & anguish, the blood & carnage of so many thousand brave warriors, whose great isfortun was to have a coward for their commander who were reduced to this situation by the cowardice & & nigardly avaricious disposition of their commander But only thre thousand made their escape. As for Ulipoon he was more tally wounded & lay prostrate on the field After the slaughter was ended, in passing over the field of the Slain Hamack beheld this illfated prince an object truly pitiable to behold. In the agonies of death & wreathing under the most acute pains he explaims Alas my wretched situation. It was avarice, cursed avarice which induced me to enagge in this horrid war & now my the mischief and cruelties I intended as a means to acquire wealth & agrandizement are justly turned upon my own head. He spoke & deeply groaning he breathes no more The galant Hamack droped a tear & feeling no enmity toward the lifeless remains of those who had been his enimies he ordered three hundred men to bury remain on the ground & commit their bodies to the Dust. This says he, is the will of him whose compassion is infinite He then directed Como his chief captain to pusue the survivors of Ulipoons army & to destroy them if possible With the remainder of his own troops he returned back to cary into effect the order of Hamboon. Como overtook & killed about a thousand of the wretched fugitives. The remainder escaped to their own land except about fifty who fled to the army of Hamboon & gave him the dreadful intelligence of Ulipoons destruction. Great were the amazement & consternation of Hambock & his whole army. They now beheld their situation to be extremely critical & dangerous & saw the necessity of the most vigourous & heroic exertions. What says Hambock to his princes is our wisest Course to pursue? Sabamah, Hancoll & Wunapon advised him to retreat without losing a moment, for say they we have taken ample revenge for the crime of Elseon. To effect this, we have thrown ourselvs into the heart of their country, have lost a large division of our army & are so weakened by our losses that we are in the utmost danger of being defeated, & even annahilated It must therefore be the hight of folly & madness to prosecute the war any further in this country But Sambul & the other other princes condemned this plan as pusilanimous & disgraceful & proposed to steal a march on the Kentucks & to storm their fort, before be ore they should be apprized of their design. This last advice met the approbation of the Emperor, Nothing says he can save our army from destruction but the most daring atchievements. That they might gain the fort without being perceived by the Kentucks, It was necessary that they should march some distance in the direction where Hamack had encamped in order to cooperate with Hamboon, when he should commence the engagement. When the night had far advanced Hambocks forces were all in readiness & began their march for the fort. They proceeded about two miles & a small party in advance discovered Hamacks warriors. This discovery produced an alter ation in Hambocks plans. He directed Sambul to proceed against the fort, whilst he as soon as the light should appear would attack Hamack. Sambul was highly pleased with this command, as a victory would ensure him the capture of Lamesa. & afford him an opportunity to obtain revenge. He arived at the fort just as the blushing moon began to appear. Great indeed was the surprize which his arival produced. On three sides he stationed small parties, who were ordered to massacre all the citizens, who should attempt to make their escape. With the main body of his army, he made an assault upon the fort. Amazement & terror seized the minds of the whole multitude of citizens in the fort. This enterprize of the Sciotans was unexpected, as they were were unprepared to lefend the fort against such a formidable force. Lamack nowever placed himself at the head of about one thousand varriors, & attempted to beat them back from the wall & revent their making a breach. But it was impossible with is small band to withstand the strength of such a mighty rmy. They broke down part of the palisades and entered he fort thro' the breach & immediately began the massacre f the defenceless multitude without regard to age or sex. sambul being anxious to find Lamesa, rushed forward with small band & surrounded a small block house He then roke down the door & entered. Here he beheld all the dies of the imperial family & many other ladies of disnction. He instantly sprang towards Lamesa in order to eize her, but was prevented by Heliza, who stept between nem & falling upon her knees implored him to spare the fe of Lamesa. Scarce had she spoken when the cruel nonster buried his sword in her bosom, & she fell lifeless efore the eyes of her dearest friend. Lamesa gave a ream & looking fiercely on Sambul she exclaimed, Thou onster of villiany & cruelty, could nothing satiate your evenge but the death of my dear friend, the amiable laliza? Here is my heart I am prepared for your next ctim. Ah no, says Sambul, your life is safe from my vord. I shall conduct you to my palace & you shall be pnored with me for your partner. Insult me not says e, thou malicious bloody villian. Either kill me or beone from my sight. My eyes can never indure the man ho is guilty of such monstrous crimes. Set your heart at st says he, my dear Lamesa. I will convince you that I n a better man than your beloved Elseon. His head shall on satiate my revenge. & then you shall be the queen of ciota. At this instant a loud voice was heard. The Kentucks are marching with a prodigious army toward the for Sambul turning to his warriors present ordered them t guard the women in that house, & not permit any of ther to escape. For, says he, I must go and destroy that arm of Kentucks. Great already had been the slaughter which the Sciotans had made of the citizens in the fort. Thos who had attempted to escape by a gate which was throw: open were met & massacred by the Sciotan warriors on th otside, but their progress was arested by the appearance o Elseon at the head of thirty thousand warriors. They ha marched with the greatest speed, for they were informed by an express that the Sciotans had invested the for When Sambul beheld them he instantly concluded to with draw his army out of the fort, & to try a battle with ther in the open field. The orders were immediately sprea thro' every part of the fort where his men were employe in killing the defenceless & in fighting with the little ban of desperate heroes, whom Hamack commanded. Th Sciotans were soon formed & marched out of the fort paraded in proper order for battle. Elseon observing this commanded his two men to halt, & made his arrangement to rush forward & commence the attack. Having brand ished his sword as a token for silence, he then spoke.

"My brave warriors," The glorious period has arived for arived us to display our valour in the destruction of ou enimies. What monstrous cruelties have they perpetrated Behold your city in ruins, listen to the cries of your murdered friends whose innocent blood calls for vengeance Consider the situation of those who are surrounded by the walls of yonder fort, how many thousand are massacred & how many must share their fate unless you fight like heroes. By our valour we can effect their deliverance & ri-

our land of the most disgraceful murderers that ever disgraced humanity. Their standard is that of the Sciotan king. whose malice & vengeful disposition have produced is horrid war. Urged on by his malignant passions, he has engaged undertaken a most desperate & mad enterprize. He has thrown himself & his army into a most critical & langerous situation.

Fight as you did at the great battle of Gaheno & your eninies will lie prostrate in the dust, & your name shall be clustrious. Rush forward my brave warriors, & let your notto be victory or death.

Not a moment when his warriors were stimulated for he combat did Elseon tarry, but marched with precipitation repared to make a most furios charge. Sambul was eady to meet him, & marched forward with equal boldness celerity. The charge was tremendous, not the dashing gainst each other of two mighty ships in a hurricane upon ne boistrous ocean would have been more terrible. Each rarrior fearless of danger met his antagonist, determined to estroy his life or loose his own in the contest. The battle ktended thro every part of both armies. As warriors fell the front ranks their places were supplied from the rear. reserved Bands rushing between the divisions were met y others of equal strength & valour. Helicon, the intimate iend of Elseon beheld Sambul who was encouraging his farriors to fight bravely. As no other alternative reained for them but victory or death. When Helicon beeld him, his youthful mind felt the impulse of ambition. e sprang toward Sambul & challenged him to the comit. Sambul gave him no time to repeat the challenge but shed upon him with more fury than a tiger. & with his sword he struck Helicons head from his body. Thus fe the brave the amiable youth, whose thirst for glory it peled him to attempt an exploit too rash & daring. Wa riors fell on every side & the field was covered with t dead & dying heroes. A messenger ran & told Elseon the fate of Helicon who commanded the left wing of I army & that Sambul had broken the ranks & was making indiscribible havock of his warriors. What intelligen could have been more shocking. Elseon could not refra from tears for a moment. Ah Helicon says he, thou he been more dear to me than a brother. Heaven deman that I should avenge thy cruel death. He instantly select a small band & marched with the utmost speed to the le wing of his army. he ralied his retreating warriors & e gaged in the conflict with tenfold fury. Soon he behe the mighty Sambul whose sword was crimsoned with t blood of his friend, & Sambul cast his eyes upon him & he beheld him his malice instantly inkindled into such furious flame that his reason fled for a moment & he rav like a madman, both heroessprang towards each oth Their warriors beheld them & being mutually inspired w the same sentiments the respective bands retired back, left the two indignant champions in the space between.

Ah ingrate exclaimed Sambul. Robber & perfidict scoundrel, after securing the Emperors daughter & was my wife & transporting her from our dominion have you the temerity to meet my conquering sword? To sword which pierced Labanco & cut of the head of Helica & which has destroyed hundreds of warriors more might than yourself, shall be plunged into your cowardly heart your head shall be carried in triumph into the City of To unga, & there it shall be preserved as a trophy trophy of 1y superior strength and valour.

Vain boaster says Elseon I rejoice to meet you; that the Benevolent Being will now terminate your career of oody crime. This sword shall pierce your malignant eart, & cut of that head which has ploted the ruin of my ountry.

Sambul eager for revenge could hear no more He rang forward aimed a thrust of his sword at Elseons art but Elseon turned the point of his sword from him th his own & then darted his sword into his left arm. nich caused the blood to gush forth. Sambul was now re indignant than ever. & raising his sword he threw whole strength into one mighty effort with the inten-n to divide his body in twain, but Elseon quick as the htning sprang back & Sambuls sword struck the ground th a prodigious force, which broke it in the middle. nself had nearly tumbled his whole length but recover-& beholding his defenceless situation, he ran a small tance, & seizing a stone sufficiently big for a common n to lift, he threw it at Elseon. It flew with great vety & had not Elseon bowed his head his brains must e quited their habitation. His Cap however was not so tuuate. Having met the stone as he bowed it was car-I some distance from him & lodged on the ground. 1 regardless of his Cap ran swiftly upon Sambul whose having sliped when he threw the stone had fallen n his back & had not recovered. Spare oh, spare my says he, & I will restore peace to Kentuck & you may by Lamesa. No peace says Elseon, do I desire with a 1, whose sword is red with the blood of my friend. ke & plunged his sword into Sambuls heart.

Sciotans beheld the huge body of their King pale & lifele Consternation & terror seized their minds. They fled dismay & confusion. Elseon pursued them with his w riors & overtook & killed thousands in the pursuit. Ab two thousand made good their escape, & carried the dole tidings of Sambuls death & the slaughter of his army their own land, & indeed their escape was owing to great anxiety of Elseon & his warriors to visit their frie in the fort & to ascertain the extent of the massacre t Sambul & his army had made. After pursuing the Sa tans about six miles Elseon & his army returned in gr haste & entered the fort. Great inexpressibly great the joy of the citizens when they beheld them re-turn with the laurels of Victory. & when they were inforr of the destruction of so many thousands of their enim But as great was the grief & lamentation when they held & reflected on the vast number of citizens & of Else warriors who had fallen by the sword of the Sciotans. no death produced such universal regret & sorrow as the of Helicon & Heliza. The one was the intimate friend Elseon & the other of Lamesa. They both possessed he which were formed for the most ardent friendship & le Their acquaintance produced a sincere attachment. T exchanged vows of perpetual fidelity & love to each ot & only waited for the termination of the war to fulfill t mutual engagement, to unite their hands in wedlock. their pleasing anticipation of conjugal felicity was destro by the cruel sword of Sambul. Naught availed the nocence & the amiable accomplishments of the fair Hai She must fall a victem to satiate the revenge of a barbar tyrant. Had Helicon known when he attacked the sav monster, that he had hadassasinated his beloved Heliz: would have inspired him with the added desire for revenge & added vigour to his arm & keenness to his sword. Ah, said A Kentuck bard represented the etherial form of Heiza as arriving on the celestial plain, & being told that she nust wait a short time & Helicon would arrive & conduct her as his partner to a delightful hower which was surounded by the most beautiful flowers & delicious fruits, & where they singing of musickal birds would charm them with their melody.

When Elseon had entered the fort he found that amack with his little band had made prisoners of the sciotan warriors whom Sambul had left to guard the imberial ladies, & that the Sciotans had done them no injury or even insulted them with words. Says Elseon, for this onourable treatment of my frlends I will show these enihies compassion. Go, says he to them, return in peace to our own land, & tell your friends that Elseon will not urt an enimy who has done him a favour. The time of Iseon was precious. He spent but a few moments with amesa, in which they exchanged mutual congratulations r expressions of the most tender & sincere affection. She onjured him to spare the life of her father & brother & ot to expose his own life any farther than his own honour the interest of his country required. I shall cheerfully lys he, comply with every request which will promote our happiness. He embraced her, & bade her adieu. e situation of Hamboons army might require his immedie return, he lost no time to regulate matters in the fort. ut leaving five thousand men to bury the dead attend the tizens he marched with the remainder which consisted of out twenty thousand to Hamboons encampment. ambul marched with his division against the fort, it was Hambocks intention to have attacked Hamack the nemorning, but perceiving that Hamboon had been apprize of his movements & was then within a small distance react to cooperate with Hamacks division, Hamback altered by plan & determined to wait for the return of Sambul. If for Hamboon he concluded to wait until Elseons return These determinations of the hostile Emperors prevent for the time any engagements between the two grant armies. But when the fate of Sambuls divisions was divided & Elseon had returned with the joyful news of by victory, the Kentucks were all anxious for an immedia Battle.

But having every reason to place the highest confidence your friendship & prudence I have no reluctance in cor plying with with your request. in giving you my sentiment of the christian Religion. And so far from considering the freedom you take in making the request impertinence view it as a mark of your high esteem for me affectional solicitude for my happiness. In giving you my sentiment of the Christian religion, you will perceive that I am n trameled with traditionary & vulgar prejudice that I do n believe certain parts & certain parts & certain proposition to be treu merely because that my ancestors believe them. because they are popular. In forming my creed I bring everything to the standard of reason, that intellectual Th is an unerring & sure guide in all matters of faith & pra: tice. Having divested myself heretofore of traditionary vulgar prejudice, & submiting to the guidance of reason is impossible for me to have the same sentiments of the hristian religion which its advocates consider as orthodox. t is in my view a mass of contradictions. & an heterogenous mixture of wisdom & folly, nor can I find any clear & contrivertible evidence of its being a revelation from an afinitely benevolent & wise God. It is true that I never have ad the leisure nor patience to read the elaborate & varied roductions of divines in its vindication. every part of it ith critical attention or tostudy the metaphysical jargon of ivines in its vindication. It is enough for me to know nat propositions which are in contradiction to each other unnot both be true, & that doctrines & facts which reprent the supreme being as a barbarous & cruel tyrant can ever be dictated by infinite wisdom. Whatever the clergy v on the contrary can have no effect in altering my sentients. I know as well as they that two & two make four, that three angles of a triangle of a triangle are equal to 70 right angels. But notwithstanding I disavow any be-If in the divinity of the Bible, & consider it as a mere ıman production designed to inrich & agrandize its auths & to enable them to manage the multitude. Yet castg aside a considerable mass of rubbish & fanatical rant, I d that it contains a system of ethics or morals which cant be excelled on account of their tendency to amiliorate e condition of man. & to promote individual social & blic happiness & that in various instances it represents the mighty as possessing attributes worthy of transcendent aracter, having a view therefore to those parts of the ble which are truly good & excellent I sometimes speak it in terms of high commendation. And indeed I am lined to believe that notwithstanding the mischiefs & inies which have been pruduced by the bigoted zeal of natics & interested priests yet that such evils are more than counterbalanced in a Christian land by the benefit which result to the great mass of the people by their balieving that the Bible is of divine origin. & that it contains a revelation from God. Such being my view of the subject, I pre fer my candle to remain under to remain under a bushel, nor make no exertions to dissipate their happing delusion, as
